GENERAL CONTINENTAL NEWS

The Cunard steamer Scotia arrived at this port at an early hour yesterday morning.

The steamship Hibernian, Capt. BALLANTINE, from Liverpool on the 19th and Greencastle on the 20th of Nov., arrived at Portland at 3 o'clock yesterday morning.

The principal points of the news by both these arrivals have been anticipated by the telegrams from Cape Race published in the Times of Tuesday last, but the details, which we give below, are of interest.

The steamships City of Cork and Etna reached Liverpool on the night of the 18th ult.

The steamship City of New-York arrived at Southampton at 8 pm on the 19th ult.

The Glasgow Herald gives the report that the naval authorities in the Clyde have been instructed to detain suspected war vessels for the Confederates, should they attempt to go to sea before further investigation is made.

The London Spectator reports, on what is considered first-rate authority, that Earl RUSSELL retires from the Cabinet, and is to be succeeded by the Earl of Clarendon.

The Master of the Rolls has refused to rescind a provisional order for the winding up of the Great Ship Company.

Parliament stands prorogued to the 12th January next.

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 21, 1863.

England has altered her mind. It will not do to refuse the polite invitation of the actual NAPOLEON, who has not had his Waterloo. England will go to the Congress of Paris—grumblingly, after her fashion, but she will go. The Queen and Earl RUSSELL have written a letter accepting the Congress, provided the Emperor will be so good as to furnish them with what the door-keeper of the American Museum used to call a "programmy." Austria, Rome and the other invited Powers, after some hasty protocolling, have returned similar answers.

And now, what says the Emperor? "Certainly, ladies and gentlemen, with all my heart. You shall have a programme; and to make it the more satisfactory, I will request the oldest Monarch in Europe, the universally respected King LEOPOLD, of Belgium, once son-in-law of GEORGE III., uncle of the Queen and Prince-Consort of England, and father-in-law of the new Emperor of Mexico, to draw up the important document. So we are to have a Congress with a programme; but who is to guarantee that the appointed order will be adhered to? Who knows what questions may arise, or how they may be settled, when once that Congress has assembled.

Russia accepts the Congress, but prepares for it by iron-casting her fortifications, increasing her ironclad navy, forging steel ironmon of the largest caliber, and getting ready to throw her sword into the scale. Russia is haughty and defiant. She is ready for negotiation, but equally ready for a fight. It is quite evident that Russia has not been in a long time so strong, so united, and so ready to defy all Europe. England has been sorely humiliated by her. She interfered in behalf of Poland; the interference was rejected. England would not fight, and Russia said: "If you are not ready to back your words with artillery, you had better hold your tongue." England has meekly submitted, and goes to this Congress of Paris in the hope of quietly getting out of a disgraceful position.

The time for the Congress has not been fixed, that I am aware of, but the questions that will arise may be readily foreseen. "I demand," the Emperor will say, "freedom for Poland." "I demand that France withdraw from Rome, and surrender Nice and Savoy," may be the retort courteous. "Let Austria give up Venetia," cries Italy. "Yes, and independence for Hungary." "Let England abandon Gibraltar!" shouts Spain. "And Malta," says France. "And give independence to Ireland," says the Czar: "why not?" "And what business has she in India?" "Give me my Schleswig-Holstein," cries Denmark. "My Rhenish provinces and natural boundaries," says NAPOLEON. If one European question is to be settled in a Congress, why not all? But though these questions may be debated and discussed, they will not be settled; and if the Emperor hopes they may, he must also be prepared for a far different mode of settlement.

No—a thousand Congresses will not compel Russia, the president of monarchies, to give up Poland, or one foot of all her broad territories. Austria, less powerful, is only less stubborn, and will not abandon her corner of Italy. Will England withdraw from Gibraltar and Malta, or from either? I think she only waits a good excuse to do so. She has given up the Ionian Islands, and the sooner for the others of Corfu are to be ceded. The Congress is a noble idea. I am afraid it will be found impracticable.

The death of the King of Denmark raises Prince CHRISTIAN to the throne. He is not a great man—only a nice gentlemanly person. The eldest son or daughter of the Prince of Wales, looked to be born next March, will have a King for its grandfather. But thorns already prick through King CHRISTIAN's bed of roses. Up rises a claimant for the crown of Schleswig-Holstein, backed by the German Confederation, and Hamburg is a state of effervescence. If the Germans ever stopped talking, and went to fighting, this question would soon be in a way of settlement. But it will go before the Congress.

England is occupied just now by the pleadings in the Alexandra case, interminable in their length, and not yet ended. If the decision is against the Government, it may go to the House of Lords. The two rams are tied up by the horns until the Alexandra matter is settled. Then there is one of those long, tiresome awkward court-martials—this time the Col. CRAWFORD case, about the death of Sergt.-Maj. LINZ in India. It takes days to examine and cross-examine a single witness. The war in New-Zealand is a cause of anxiety. The natives are well armed, full of fight, and are by no means contemptible foes to encounter. The Japan business is also a very ugly one. It has closed all English mouths, for a time at least, to any protest against uncivilized warfare, whether exercised by Russia or America. England must either back square out of Japan, or fight for occupation. It is evident that the Japanese mean war. It is also said that they are much better prepared for it than is generally supposed. England is also involved in a vast and interminable war in China.

At home great efforts are made to put a good face upon matters; but it is pretty evident that this Winter is to be a very hard one, and the coming year is not hopeful. There will probably be a great war in Europe, which England cannot keep out of. The war in America is a calamity to England, which she feels more and more every day. That war may make Americans rich, but it diminishes the wages of Englishmen $65,000,000 a year. Even in London it has thrown thousands out of work. The rise in cotton goods, hither to the cheap clothing of the poor, is also a great calamity. These goods have nearly doubled in price in the past month, and they are rising every day. The cotton manufacturers and dealers are in consternation. It was all very well as long as their heavy stocks were going off at heavy prices; but now these are gone, and nothing remains but dead capital, with a very short supply of poor staple, at an enormous price. You will hear, within six months, a louder clamor against the American war than has yet been raised—the clamor of capitalists who want cotton to spin, and of the poor, who want cotton to wear.

Just in time to aid this clamor we have two Confederate books, which will each have some influence. BERTRAY has published Mrs. GARDNER's account of her imprisonment in Washington. It is as bitter as a woman's hate can make it. Perhaps it is rather too spiteful to serve its object. People do not pity one who seems so well able to take her own part, and many will wonder, not that she was treated with such severity, but that she got off so easily. She glories in having sent information constantly to the rebel commanders, and was paid for all her sufferings when JEFF. DAVIS told her that, but for her, they would have had no Bull Run to boast of.

The other book is a commercial, statistical and political work on cotton, by GEORGE MCHENRY, a Philadelphian, but a Confederate by adoption, and one of the most indefatigable workers in that cause in Europe. He writes for the Index, the Times, the Economist, and works away with wonderful industry. His book is dedicated, in a long epistle, to Mr. GREGORY, M. P., and is intended to influence the action of the coming session of Parliament.

The Times, you will be sorry to learn, feels dreadfully discouraged about this war in America. It sees no prospect of its termination. For all that it can see, it may last as long as the English wars of the Roses, about thirty years, or the thirty years' war in Germany—worse than this, perhaps, many fear it will be. The Romans and Northern barbarians were fighting each other five hundred years, and the Moors and Spaniards kept up a bloody contest for eight hundred years. Think of an American war, Southern ports blockaded, and Surat cotton, scant and dear at that, for 800 years, till A. D., 2863! It is a gloomy prospect. Why, the English coal mines are expected to give out in a quarter of that time—that is, in 2863—and the prospect is distressing. I am aware that Mr. SEWARD and Mr. CHASE are both rather sanguinely committed to shorter periods, but the Times does not, I regret to say, place implicit confidence in either of them, and is gloomy and low-spirited accordingly.

The Archbishop of Tuam has written a letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, on the Irish exodus, which he eloquently denounces as the consequence of Irish wrongs. The Irish, oppressed, plundered, denied security and justice at home, are going to America by thousands, filled with hatred of the Government, which they believe is depopulating Ireland, and driving them away. It is all very well for Prof. LEONARD and the Times to say it is a merely economical question, and that an Irishman, with difficulty getting a shilling a day at home, will emigrate to England, where he can get two shillings a day, or to America, where he can get from four to ten shillings. Certainly he will, but there remains the question, why should he get but one shilling a day in Ireland—and why such a country should be deprived of its people and converted into a cattle-pasture. These land Ireland for the Irish. Ireland is for English and Scotch graziers. It is a pity, no doubt, but the best thing Irishmen can do is to emigrate to America. The more the merrier. It is aggravating that they will not go to Canada. Australia is too far. Canada complains bitterly of lack of immigrants. Some reports of mining discoveries circulated here may help her, perhaps.

The friends of WILLIAM and MARY HOWITT in America will sympathize with them on the loss of their youngest son, supposed to have been drowned on an exploring expedition in New-Zealand. An elder brother is well known as a bold explorer in Australia. Their two other children, daughters, are nearer home. Mrs. ANNA MARY HOWITT WATTS—her husband is a son of the poet, ALARIC WATTS, and has a place under Government—is pursuing her artist studies here, with the enthusiasm which finds expression in her "Art Student in Munich." A younger sister is spending the Winter with Miss BREMER in Sweden.

STRAKOSCH is playing his magic violin here at JULLIEN's concerts at Her Majesty's Theatre, where we have a full orchestra, three military bands, full chorus, the best singers, and STRAKOSCH, all for a shilling. It is the dull season for amusements, before the Christmas holidays, but most of the theatres are doing well. The mirrors are covered with ghosts and goblins—Pepper, BUTLER's and others. At the Queen's, the other night, I saw out two ghost pieces, only that some of the ghosts were angels. The last piece was "THUS COMES AND HIS VICTIMS"—an effective Bowery melodrama, which sent at least one woman into hysterics, so that she had to be carried from the gallery. The English certainly make themselves very comfortable at their places of amusement. In the stalls at the Queen's, which has been one of the most fashionable places in London, a party of ladies regaled themselves with ham sandwiches, which they unrolled from a piece of paper, and then drank out of a bottle some transparent liquid, which they complained of as being cold, but which they seemed to relish, notwithstanding. At every fall of the curtain the pit and gallery resounded with "Oranges!" "porter!" while refreshments are more quietly served in the stalls and boxes.

As usual, on Saturday, we are waiting for news; but we have been so much disappointed in what have seemed the most critical periods of the war, that we are wearied or entirely patient. Probably all the armies, North and South, have gone into Winter quarters. Possibly—but it is useless to dwell on possibilities. There were, at last accounts, three sieges—Charleston is besieged; Chattanooga is besieged; and either Washington or Richmond—it seems a little doubtful which is threatened at a respectful distance. This is the aspect of the war, at this moment, as seen from Europe. MONADNOCK.

OUR PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

The Debates in the Chambers—Contested Elections—Official Documents on the Mexican and American Questions—Distinguished Arrivals.

PARIS, FRIDAY, Nov. 20, 1863.

The Parisians have found a new and most agreeable sensation in the perusal of the debates in the Chambers. It is now thirteen years since there has been any liberty of speech in France, thirteen long years since the names of BERRYER, and THIERS, and MARIE, and all that represents the oratory of the country, have appeared in the public prints in a debate, and the delight of the people at this new and strange sensation is universal. It seems as if the life of the nation had revived in these few names and in the few words already pronounced at the famous tribune of the Palais Bourbon, and under this influence the true friends of progress have conceived new hopes for the future of the country.

Thus far the time of the Chamber has been occupied with the verification of the certificates of election, and, what will perhaps appear astonishing, from three to four weeks will be required for this work. The House is composed of 280 members, not many more than the American House of Representatives, and yet, instead of the two or three contested seats of the American House, one hundred and eighty seats are here contested—a result which shows either a sad lack of system, or else a good deal of something else than honest dealing. The spectacle is not a brilliant one in any sense.

The Chamber has considered three-fourths of the certificates, and thus far not admitted a single reclamation from a defeated member, while but one election, that of M. PELLETAN, at Paris, has been broken and sent back to the people. M. PELLETAN, whose majority was 47 votes, and who received the certificate of election, was sent back because on examination by the Chamber, it was found that he had not a fair majority of all the votes cast. He will be sent back again to the Chamber at the election which will be immediately held. Thus there will be three members to elect at Paris, for Messrs. HAVIN and JULES FAVRE, who received a double election, have accepted the Departmental certificates, because the Paris districts are certain to return two Republicans in their place. Who these two candidates are to be we do not yet know certainly, but they will be announced almost immediately.

The election of Mr. SAMUEL WELLES DE LAVALETTE was contested on the ground that he was an American. Mr. WELLES was born in Boston in 1824. His father afterward moved to France, where he died after amassing a fortune in the banking and commission business. His widow married the Marquis DE LAVALETTE, a leading French diplomatist, who, under the present dynasty, has represented his Government at Constantinople, at Vienna, and at Rome. The son of Mr. WELLES has been adopted by his step-father, under the title of the Count WELLES DE LAVALETTE, and it is under this title that he was been elected to the Chamber by one of the country districts. His opponent pretended that he did not take the oath of naturalization previous to the oath of fidelity to the Constitution and the Emperor, which is required at the moment of enregistering his name as a candidate; and, moreover, brought up the whole question of the naturalization of foreigners, with objections on several points. The discussion occupied the whole of yesterday's sitting of the Chamber, but the principal point against Mr. WELLES was that he did not take the first oath in time, and this was shown to be a mistake, so that he was admitted and took his seat as a member. Thus we have a Yankee boy, aged 29, representing the Dordogne in the French Chamber of Deputies. He was most ably defended in the Chamber by M. THUILLIER, a Counselor of State, named for that purpose. The young Deputy lately married the daughter of M. RONCHER, the new Minister of State, and in the politics of his native country is a good Union man.

You will not fail to remark by the official documents published at the opening of the Chambers how completely the French Government has put itself on record against an intervention in American affairs, and against an acquisition of territory in Mexico. These two questions are, for the future, exhausted, and nothing can again bring them up but the acts of the American Government itself.

You will also remark with pleasure, in one of the documents to which I refer, a well-merited and timely compliment from the French Government to the American Minister at Paris. To those of us here who know what the relations of the Minister with the Government were, this compliment was not unexpected; but different statements had been made elsewhere, and we were naturally delighted to see the Foreign Secretary put in print himself a contradiction of these statements. All of Mr. DAYTON's acts and intercourse with the French Government have been marked with so much good judgment and good taste, that the Foreign Secretary could scarcely escape from paying him a compliment, however unusual such a course might be; and, at this moment, the raising of Mr. DAYTON's dager, (if I may be permitted such a form of expression,) is worth more in France than the raising of all the hands of all the rebel agents abroad. And this brings me to say that among the arrivals yesterday at the Grand Hotel were Mr. MASON, late rebel agent in England, and Mr. WILLIAM CORNELL JEWETT, volunteer diplomat from Colorado.

GREAT BRITAIN.

CASE OF THE ALEXANDRA.

THE ARGUMENTS FOR AND AGAINST A NEW TRIAL.

By previous arrivals we have had reports of the proceedings in the case of the Alexandra to Nov. 16, inclusive. On Nov. 19—

Mr. KENNEDY, Q. C., on the part of the defendants, showed cause against the rule which had been obtained by the Crown for a new trial. He observed that the Attorney-General said that even an innocent equipment superadded to a vessel, if there were the "intent" rendered the ship liable to forfeiture, but that was not a correct view of the 7th section, which required a warlike equipment.

The Lord Chief Baron observed that if it was an offence to equip and arm, and a certain person, who might be called the principal, intended to equip and arm, anybody who assisted him in the equipment, without any reference to the arming, might be guilty of the offence under the act.

Mr. KENNEDY asked the Court to accept the construction of the section urged by Sir HUGH CAIRNS, that the equipment should be of a warlike character, or that the vessel should be so equipped as to be ready to commit hostilities. When she left there she carries any other equipment was of a perfectly lawful character. The history of the act showed you that that was a reasonable construction of its provisions, and it was supported by the fact that a British merchant had a right to sell contraband to one of two belligerents, so long as it was not in a complete state.

The Lord Chief Baron—Until the passing of the Act there was no distinction between a ship and a gun. You may now, at Birmingham or any other place in the country where there is a foundry sufficient for the purpose, order a gun and say, "This is for one of the belligerents; it will be sent to one of the belligerents; placed on board a ship there and expressly used for carrying on war against a Power with whom we are at peace;" and I am not aware that that cannot be done with reference to a ship. No doubt the statute makes that which was perfectly legal before a crime and a misdemeanor.

Mr. KENNEDY then submitted that the verdict was perfectly warranted by the evidence, supposing that the direction of the Chief Baron were correct. He did not understand the Attorney-General to admit that, assuming the construction of the statute by the defendants to be right, the evidence would warrant a different verdict. It was admitted by the Crown that the Alexandra was not armed, and the issues raised between them were, therefore, simply these—first, whether, in point of law, there should be a warlike equipment; and, next, whether the intention existed, which the Crown said did exist, in some person capable of exercising it. The objection raised by the rule was that the Chief Baron did not sufficiently direct the jury on the question of attempting to equip, or knowingly aiding or assisting to equip, but it amounted to this, that on every occasion when he spoke of "intent" he did not go on to use the words "equip, furnish, fit, or arm." He submitted this—his lordship distinctly left the question of intent to the jury. Then with regard to the ship itself he contended that the sword build was not used in the section, and told them that a ship simpliciter, as distinguished from equipment, whatever that might be, did not come within the statute. He then asked the jury whether the Alexandra was equipped, and they negatived that. But then there came the question he left to the jury, with which the other side quarrelled, and which, doubtless, fairly gave rise to discussion. Was the Chief Baron right in adopting the view pressed upon him by the Attorney-General, viz.: that supposing there was an innocent equipment of the ship, the vessel came within the statute? The Lord Chief Baron stated that equipping per se, even with the lightest would not render the ship liable to capture; and he asked the jury whether, if there was an intent to equip her, with the view of her being used by one belligerent against another. Upon this direction, which he contended was the right view of the statute, the jury were perfectly justified upon the evidence in finding the verdict they did, and they would not have been justified in returning any other.

Mr. Baron BRAMWELL—Supposing a man built a vessel, which was about to sail for Madeira or Tercera, and he said, "I know she is to be armed there, and to cruise against the United States;" and supposing these things followed upon the building of the ship—would that be an equipping, fitting out, furnishing or arming with intent to cruise and commit hostilities?

Mr. KENNEDY—I should say not. It is, however, quite sufficient for us to say that any equipment, however complete, in order to bring it under the act, must be of a distinctively warlike character. I go further, and say that the object of the statute is to prevent the ports of this country being made the ports of departure for vessels equipped for aggression against a Power or country with which we are at peace. This view of the case is supported by the circumstance out of which the act arose, and the whole history of legislation on the subject.

Mr. MELLISH also followed on the same side. He said he ventured to go the extent of saying that it was perfectly legal under the act of Parliament for any shipbuilder in this country to build a ship, well knowing it was adapted for war, under a contract with one of two belligerents, to equip her afterwards, if it was necessary to enable it to sail away from this country, and to deliver it to the belligerent, either here or elsewhere in an unarmed state. That being so, a ship was not forbidden by the statute, and the question was this, was it the intention of the Legislature, though it did not forbid the building of a ship in express and direct terms, to make it by implication unlawful? Or, lastly, it was impossible to build a ship or sell a ship adapted for one of two belligerents unless they allowed the builders to sell it in such a state as would enable it to sail away. To say to the shipbuilders of this country: "You may sell ships to one of two belligerents as much as you please, but you must not put anything on board which will enable them to sail away," was manifest absurdity. If, it was the object of the Legislature to prevent any belligerent providing himself with ships from the ports of this country, it seemed extraordinary that they did not in plain terms say: "You shall not be allowed to build a ship for use of two belligerents, nor to sell it to him."

Mr. KENYLEY was also heard on the part of the defendants.

The Attorney-General then rose to support the rule. He would first apply himself to the argument of Sir H. CAIRNS, and the different heads of that argument. First, Sir H. CAIRNS said (and he could not but think that there were traces of conscious weakness in his mode of arranging the argument) that the probable object of the statute was to be determined, a priori, on principles of international law. The usual method was to ascertain the meaning of the statute by a careful examination of its language and provisions. Then he went into its history—the history of American and English legislation upon the subject. When he spoke of the history of legislation, his learned friend took an unusually wide and discursive method of argument. It was not very common in Courts of law to hear Parliamentary debates quoted, or the speech which this or that statesman made when a bill was under discussion referred to, in order to determine the probable object of the statute. The usual practice was to look for the meaning within the four corners of the act itself. Thirdly, Sir H. CAIRNS gave the provisions of the statute, and contended that the equipment referred to must be of a distinctly warlike character. The learned gentleman then defended himself from the charge of inconsistency which had been made against him, as between the position he had now taken up and his speeches in Parliament, in reference to the Oreto and the Alabama, and went on to say that the advisers of the Crown were not seeking to obtain a decree for the forfeiture of a vessel against a subject, except upon what appeared to them to be honest and just grounds, which called imperatively for the interference of the law. He then proceeded to examine the rules of international law, which Sir H. CAIRNS said were the keys to this statute, and contended that his argument was entirely fallacious. The ruling of the learned Chief Baron he complained of as misleading to the jury, which he directed them that, in his opinion, ships were not prohibited, and said that the object of the statute was to prevent our waters from being made the scene of hostile operations between belligerent Powers. Looking at the consequences which might follow from the subjects of a neutral state being permitted to send out ships to assist one of two belligerents, it was quite clear that the Legislature were justified in taking ships out of the category of ordinary commerce, and dealing with them specially by statute. With reference to the Foreign Enlistment Act, it was considered necessary, in order to enable the Sovereign of this country to take measures which might preserve the peace of the kingdom and avoid entanglements with foreign Powers, (bear in mind foreign Powers by international law had no right to demand this,) that the Crown should assert its unquestioned right of compelling its own subjects and foreigners within these realms to observe that neutrality which the Sovereign desired to observe. It was a mistake to suppose (as might have been inferred from speeches which had been made) that the law of this country regarded the trade in contraband with any degree of favor; and in answer to the observation as to why the trade in ships should not be as free as that in a gunpowder, he had to say that, independently of the Foreign Enlistment Act, Her Majesty had the power, when she pleased, by an order in Council, to prohibit every other species of contraband trade. She had not the power to deal with ships, which were left to be specially dealt with by the Foreign Enlistment Act; and their Lordships would, therefore, see in what position we should be placed if that act was considered nugatory. There were minor reasons why ships should be dealt with exceptionally. A ship was not a mere poetical figure, though it was said "She walked the water like a thing of life." The moment they launched a ship from a neutral port, either ready armed or to be armed shortly, by means organized in the neutral territory, and placed in a condition to commit hostilities, they superseded to the conflict of maritime war. Was there, then, no difference between the case of furnishing ships of war and furnishing ordinary contraband, which requires no noxious power until it is delivered in the belligerent's country, and which, up to that time, was a mere matter of commerce? As to the argument that if the armament takes place outside the boundary the act was not broken, it was quite clear if that view was adopted, the statute would be entirely nugatory, for it would be then continually evaded. If the statute was of a preventive character, why wait until the thing was done? If the doctrine he was combating was held to be correct, then he could imagine no state of things more likely to endanger our relations with foreign Powers. It would be no answer to say to a belligerent that our municipal law permitted the leaving of ships in this way from our ports. The belligerent would have a right to complain and to demand that our ports should no longer be made points of departure for vessels ready or soon to be prepared to commit hostilities against it. He did not wish the learned judge to wrest or strain neutral law; but at the same time he trusted they would thrust to the winds the dizzy sophistry and pettifogging interpretations which had been applied to the Foreign Enlistment Act by the other side. Foreign Governments would not be put off by such ridiculous distinctions as those which had been put forward in order to explain away the offence—distinctions which, if accepted, would destroy that whole force of the Act of Parliament, and speedily involve us in hostilities. The learned gentleman then went on to explain his view of the statute, and was proceeding with his address when the Court rose, at 4 o'clock.

FOURTH DAY—NOV 20.

On Nov. 20 the Attorney-General resumed his argument in support of the rule for a new trial in this case. He replied to the arguments of Sir H. CAIRNS as to the American Foreign Enlistment Act, and showed, by reference to the message of WASHINGTON to Congress, when it was introduced, and the decisions of American Judges, that it was not simply intended to give legal sanction to certain rules of international law which previously existed, and to inflict penalties against the subjects of the United States who should violate the neutrality owed to others and belligerent nations. It was an act, the object of which was to enforce municipal regulations for the due observance of the strict principle of neutrality toward belligerents for the purposes of war. His learned friend (Sir H. CAIRNS) had spoken of proximate causes of war. Taking a ship out of the territory of a neutral Power, with means upon her for carrying on war, was an act of hostility and a proximate cause of war. It was certainly an act which tended to injure the neutral Government. So was sending out a ship not armed for war, but ready to receive her arms, and sending out a ship prepared for a warlike purpose, in which something was left to be done when she got beyond a certain line at sea. The statement that these ships might be intercepted by the cruisers of one of the belligerents, when they got beyond that line, afforded no answer. The probability was that there would be no such cruisers to meet and seize them. For instance, if at the commencement of the present war the Federal Government had adopted means for getting armed vessels from our ports it would have been ridiculous to say that the cruisers of the Confederate States, whose coasts were blockaded, could have prevented their coming out of those ports. The learned counsel then came to the Foreign Enlistment Act itself. With regard, first, to the four words, "equip, furnish, and fit out or arm," he thought he could show that each of those words sufficiently differed from the other to explain why the Legislature considered it expedient to put in every one of them. He denied the proposition that "equipment was an expression that comprehended nothing in the structure of the ship, in the formation of its hull. He contended that the bulwarks were certainly, in the case of the Alexandra, a part of the equipment, as they would be in all steam-rams, cupola ships, and iron-plated ships. "Fitting-out" was a term large enough to comprehend every act in the construction of the ship from the laying down of the first plank of the hull to the end. The word "arm" needed no comment. The whole of the words, it would be observed, were in the disjunctive, the last was divided from the others by the disjunctive conjunction "or." The word "furnish," the smallest of them all, comprended everything in the shape of furniture. The learned counsel then proceeded to deal with the summing up of the Chief Baron and other points at great length.

COMMENTS.

The London Times says it is doubtful whether the decision of the Exchequer in the Alexandra case will be given before the end of the term, and the decision, whatever it may be, will not set the question at rest. An appeal will still lie both to the Court of the Exchequer Chamber and to the House of Lords, and supposing a new trial to be at last granted, the battle which occupied four days last June, will have to be fought over again. All this time the legal character, not only of the Alexandra, but of the rams in the Mersey, must remain unsettled, and no similar contracts can safely be executed by any shipbuilders.

The Times adds:

"It is at least some comfort to reflect that the Alexandra case will deserve to be the landmark of jurisprudence, though the Foreign Enlistment act should be amended, and that the embargo laid in the meantime upon vessels of warlike build can injure none but those who have shown perfect indifference, at the risk of embroiling England in war."

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian writes:

"I have been sounding my legal acquaintance about the argument in the Alexandra case. I find a very strong feeling among them that the ruling of the Chief Baron will be supported by the Court. If so, I should think it extremely unlikely that the matter will be carried further, after such a discussion as it will have received. The general impression among lawyers seems to be that the object aimed at by the statute was the prohibition of armed ships sailing under letters of marque of the South American Republics, and usually equipped and owned by English owners, and that it was never meant to include mere transactions at Messrs. LAIRD have engaged in. The language of the act favors this interpretation, as do the contemporary discussions and history."

SCANDAL IN HIGH LIFE.

THE CASE OF LORD PALMERSTON.

Correspondence of the Manchester Guardian.

LONDON, Thursday, Nov. 19.

Apropos of the scandal against the Premier, which loomed so large while it remained in the impalpable form of gossip, that has collapsed into something so insignificant since the Morning Star and Standard did His Lordship the unintentional kindness of giving publicity to the affair, I may tell this much to your readers, that nobody in London who speaks of the matter now attaches the least credit to the charge. The circumstances of the persons it emanates from, both principal and agent—the facts, as far as known—and the age of the noble Viscount—all tell the same way, against attaching the smallest credit to the accusation. I have taken some pains to get reliable information, and, for the satisfaction of those of your readers, and they must be many, who have felt pain at hearing of any imputation of such a kind against such a man, I may say that nothing can be slimsier than the grounds on which Mr. O'FLAHERTY, through Mr. WHITE, his attorney, has asserted the guilt of Lord PALMERSTON. It is well known to all who have business at Cambridge House—and may be ascertained by any one who presents himself there between 12 and 1 o'clock, any day that Lord PALMERSTON may be disengaged—that during that hour everybody asking to see Lord PALMERSTON is shown in to him in his working-room which looks full into the court-yard of Cambridge House through windows unpovided with even lower blinds of any kind. There is a waiting-room close by, where the applicants for interview wait as His Lordship disposes of his callers in succession. Among these, some time in the Summer of last year, (I think I am right in the date,) a lady presented herself, on business that she had connections who could give material assistance to the Government in some impending election then pending. Lord PALMERSTON saw her, heard her story, and bowed her out. The same lady presented herself a second time with a tale, as I understand, of distress and difficulty, and this time the kindly Viscount dismissed her with what I suppose had been the object of her first call—a £5 note. It is supposed that on one or both of these visits her husband was in the neighborhood, if he did not actually escort her to the Cambridge House. As far as I can learn, it is on the fact of these two interviews that the case is mainly grounded, though it is hardly conceivable that such a charge should be founded on such data. It is a matter of course that the lady concerned denies the allegations of the petitioner. The case could never be brought forward if she did not. I see it is now stated that the petitioner and the respondent are not married, or that legal proof of their marriage is not forthcoming, and that this hitch may prevent the matter from going further before Sir J. WILDE. I hear also, but I cannot say if truly, that it is the intention of Lord PALMERSTON to proceed for defamation against the petitioner. Nobody believes that there has been any offer of compromise for a consideration on Lord PALMERSTON's part. But it is not surprising that, however buoyant may be Lord PALMERSTON's temperament, and however the charge may have failed to make the least impression among those who knew him, or the society in which he moves, he should be much annoyed at being made the object of such an accusation. As I have heard that this affair—which is already stale in London—has excited much sensation in the North, I thought it only fair to give you these details, which may be relied on as far as they go.

AMERICANS BEFORE THE DIVORCE COURT.

From the London Herald, Nov. 21.

The case of ROGERS vs. ROGERS and NEWTON was before the Divorce Court yesterday. Dr. DEANE, Q. C., and Mr. TREDER were for the petitioner, and Mr. SERJEANT HILL for the co-respondent.

The suit was by Rev. WILLIAM YATES ROGERS for a divorce from his wife, who entered no appearance, on the ground of her adultery with the co-respondent, HENRY PETERSON NEWTON.

It appeared that the petitioner, who is in orders, married the respondent at Virginia, where he was officiating, in February, 1856. After cohabiting until 1858, during which there were four children issue of the marriage, a separation took place in this country, in consequence of the intemperance of the respondent, and the connection alleged between her and the co-respondent was then formed. A letter from the respondent to Rev. JAMES ROGERS, brother of the petitioner, in which she admitted her guilt, stating that she had been taken advantage of while she was under the influence of drink, and inclosing a letter to her husband, imploring forgiveness, was read, as well as a confession of her guilt. A letter was also read from the co-respondent, in which he did not deny the adultery.

Rev. JAMES ROGERS was examined. He said that he was incumbent of Lower Gornell, in Staffordshire, and a Magistrate, and his father resided in the same parish. His brother, the petitioner, had a cure at Christchurch, Winchester, Virginia, and afterward at St. Paul's, Louisville, Kentucky. His brother returned to England in 1843, but went back to America. He came to this country again in 1853, and he and his wife lived first in Buckinghamshire, and afterward at Mornington-crescent, in London. His brother was too kind to his wife, who was almost constantly drunk. She went back to America, but, on the breaking out of the American war, in 1861, she returned to England; but, from her intemperate habits, it was arranged that she should leave her husband and come to this neighborhood. She lived with him at his house first, but he afterward placed her in a cottage at the bottom of his garden. She had an allowance from her husband, which witness paid her regularly. About the end of 1862 he heard rumors in the parish, which induced him to have her residence watched. On the 31st of December, 1862, his children went to drink tea with her, and he called later in the evening. There were two or three persons present who were practicing music together, and Mrs. ROGERS was dancing, to show the company how the niggers danced. [Laughter.] Mrs. ROGERS was not sober. On the 31st of January, 1863, from something he heard, he went to the respondent's house about 8½ o'clock at night. He found her and Mr. NEWTON together at supper. The co-respondent, whom he deposed from the situation of leader of his choir, had formerly been superintendent of his Sunday school.

Mr. SERJEANT HILL, for the co-respondent, who denied the adultery, examined the witness, but elicited nothing material.

MARY ROGERS stated that she lived at Lower Gornell, and used to wash for Mrs. ROGERS, and supply her with milk. She was at Mrs. ROGERS's on the 31st of December last. Mr. NEWTON came on that evening with some parties, who commenced rehearsing music for a tea party that was to take place the following evening. When the other persons went away Mr. NEWTON remained, and Mrs. ROGERS frequently put his hat upon her head. When the other parties left Mrs. ROGERS desired to go away also, and she said she would not have us if Mr. NEWTON left, as he had a wife. [Laughter.] She sat down, and in about a minute Mrs. ROGERS asked her how she dared to remain in her place after she had desired her to leave, and seized her bonnet. The witness saw the parties three times in the night, and on each occasion she heard Mrs. ROGERS and Mr. NEWTON kissing each other and very pleasant inside. On Sunday, the 5th of the following February, she saw Mrs. ROGERS come out of the church, and in about a minute afterward Mr. NEWTON went after her into the house. When they entered the house the street door was locked.

Another witness was called, but

Mr. SERJEANT HILL said that after the manner in which the last witness had given her evidence, he could not think of offering any further opposition to the petitioner's case.

Sir J. P. WILDE considered that the adultery had been established, but said that he would require further proof than was furnished of the marriage.

The case accordingly stood over.

BALFE vs. CRAMPTON.

From the London Star, Nov. 21.

This was a suit instituted by Miss VIRGINIA BALFE, daughter of M. BALFE, the eminent composer, against Sir JOHN CRAMPTON, formerly English Minister at St. Petersburgh, for dissolution of her marriage with Sir JOHN, which took place at the chapel of the English Embassy in that city, in the year 1861, on the ground that the marriage had not been consummated, and impotency on the part of the respondent.

Dr. DEANE and Mr. SHARPE appeared for the petitioner; and Mr. HENRY JAMES for the respondent.

The case had been before the late Judge-Ordinary, (Sir CRESSWELL CRESSWELL,) who made an order for a medical examination of both the petitioner and the respondent, under which order Sir CHARLES LOCOCK and Dr. FARR had examined the petitioner, but the respondent, Sir JOHN CRAMPTON, had not complied with that order.

M. BALFE proved the marriage at St. Petersburgh.

Sir CHARLES LOCOCK and Dr. FARR were examined, and gave evidence of the results of their examination of the petitioner.

During the trial a question was raised as to the powers of the Judge to decide the case, the respondent not having been examined, but a case was cited in which the old Ecclesiastical Court had pursued such a course.

Mr. H. JAMES offered no defence.

The learned Judge ultimately said he would adopt the decision quoted, and pronounced a decree nisi for a dissolution of the marriage, on the ground that it was null and void.

Decree accordingly.

A MONSTER GUN.

TRIAL OF SIR WILLIAM ARMSTRONG'S SIX-HUNDRED-POUNDER.

From the Manchester Examiner, Nov. 21.

This monster gun—which weighs about 22 tons, is 18 feet long over all, and has a bore of 13½ inches—was submitted to a trial at Shoeburyness on Thursday. It carries a conical cast-iron hollow-headed shot weighing 600 pounds, and capable of containing a bursting charge of no less than 40 pounds of powder. The charge used on Thursday with shot was 70 pounds, with shell 50 pounds. By the time everything was ready the interest of the spectators had reached the highest pitch; and it was amid exclamations of surprise and wonder from even those who were skilled in artillery, that the gun, being loaded into it and rammed home first the powder, looking like a tolerable bolster, and next the conical cast-iron hollow-headed shot, measuring nearly 30 inches in length, by 13.3 inches in diameter. The shot is first placed in a cradle and lifted to the mouth of the gun by means of movable shear legs provided with blocks and pulleys. The cradle hinges on to a couple of hooks on the mouth of the piece, and holds the ponderous shot in the proper position for being rammed home. The gun was given one degree of elevation, and the word passed that all was ready. The last bugle call was sounded, and the great gun was fired for the first time. The ponderous shot burst from the mouth of the piece with a terrific rush and roar, striking the sand at about 700 yards from the shore, leaping and dashing onward, ricochetting five or six times, and finally burying itself near the 4,000 yards target. After nine rounds had been fired with the solid shot three rounds were fired with blind shell, and the range obtained was, the first shot 1,880 yards, and the second 1,890 yards, the elevation being five degrees. The steel shells which are to be employed for the gun, and which will possess penetrating power superior to ordinary solid shot, will contain fifteen pounds of powder, or about equal to the charge of powder for a the truth of the allegations made regarding this vessel by the Glasgow Emancipation Society, that the vessel was altered by them to have been constructed for the Confederate Government, and that, like the Alabama, she was intended to prey upon the merchant shipping of the Northern States; that she was fitted with disguised portholes, and other requisites for a war-ship, and craving the Government to make an investigation into the character, ownership, and destination of the ship. The Pampero is a screw-steamer of 1,000 tons, and was said, when launched, to be for London owners.

THE GEORGIA.

From the European Times, Nov. 21.

The following is an authentic account of the vessels captured by the Confederate steamer Georgia, now at Cherbourg:

	Value.
Ship Dictator, of New-York (burnt)	$80,000
Bark Good Hope, of Boston (burnt)	65,000
Ship Gen. Griswold, of New-York (bonded)	100,000
Bark J. W. Seaver	30,000
Ship Constitution, of New-York (burnt)	40,000
Ship City of Bath, of Bath (burnt)	20,000
Ship Prince of Wales, of Bath (bonded)	20,000
Ship John Watts, of New-York (bonded)	20,000
Ship Bold Hunter (burnt)	35,000

The above are all the prizes the Georgia has captured during her cruise. The letter from which we gain the above information is dated Nov. 16, and adds that the Georgia was going into dock at Cherbourg for repairs.

THE CASE OF CAPT. STONE.

An influential meeting was held in Liverpool to protest against the proceedings of Marine Courts of Enquiry in general, and in the case of Capt. Stone, of the Africa, in particular.

Capt. JEFFERS was one of the speakers, and found fault with the British Government for not allowing the New-York merchants to place a steam-whistle on Cape Race. The accident to the Africa, he said, would not have happened if such a whistle had been in use.

Capt. BALLANTYNE pointed out that steamers only went near Cape Race for the benefit of the public, and if he was to be punished for sometimes going too near, he would not go near there any longer.

The meeting pledged itself to make every effort to secure the return of Capt. STONE's certificate.

A NEW LINE OF STEAMERS.

An agreement for a contract for five years for a monthly line of mail steamers between Panama and New-Zealand, had been completed between Hon. CHARLES WARD on behalf of the colony, and the International Royal Mail Packet Company, which, for some time past, has had a line of mail steamers between Australia and New-Zealand. The time to be occupied between Panama and New-Zealand is thirty days, under penalty for excess and bonus for shorter periods, and the subsidy is to be £76,000 per annum for the entire route, comprising Panama, New-Zealand and Sydney, guaranteed by the colony of New-Zealand alone. The service is to commence about the 1st of January, 1865, and it will complete the circle of British mail steam service round the globe.

THE PROPOSED CONGRESS.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S RESPONSE.

Correspondence of the London Times.

PARIS, Friday, Nov. 29, 1863.

The answer of Queen VICTORIA to the Emperor's letter of invitation to the Congress was delivered to His Majesty yesterday. It does not announce an unqualified acceptance of the invitation, but, as has been already stated, seeks for information as to the precise points which are to be submitted for discussion. Some further communications will probably pass between the two Governments on the subject. The belief that a Congress will meet at all is losing ground daily.

It is curious that since the Speech from the Throne the Moniteur publishes on the Polish insurrection only the news given in the Russian papers. Before the Speech it used to give not merely the Polish version, but even the official dispatches of the National Governments of Warsaw to their representative in Paris. Since that period also the papers that were most constant and vehement in defence of the Poles, as well as those that caricatured the Russians, have been "invited" to be milder in their articles and sketches. The same "invitation" has been addressed to the sheets that used to give the telegraphic dispatches from Cracow. It is rumored that Count PERSIGNY, who is in some way connected with the Bonaparte family, is to make some interesting communications to the Czar on the part of the Emperor.

Correspondence of the London Herald.

PARIS, Sunday, Nov. 29, 1863.

It is announced that yesterday morning, after the Cabinet Council, Earl CowLEY had an audience of the Emperor, and delivered Her Majesty's reply to the invitation to a Congress. The letter, I am told, is signed by Her Majesty, and countersigned by Earl RUSSELL. It expresses Her Majesty's readiness to send a representative to the Congress, but adds that before doing so it will be necessary that the objects to be discussed at the said Congress should be duly specified. In a word, the reply of England may be, in diplomatic language, summed up as follows: "We don't mind attending a Congress, but we must know first what is to be discussed there; perhaps our good friend and brother NAPOLEON will have so obliging as to be a little more explicit, and send us a programme."

In order to avoid the reproach of want of "disinterestedness," the Emperor of the French is said to have informed Lord COWLEY that he was prepared to give Europe a "fresh proof" of his sincerity. He would write to King LEOPOLD of Belgium, and ask him to draw up the draft of a programme, which the various Powers might each discuss, and which might serve as a basis for a preliminary negotiation. Such is the news of the day in Paris. I do not vouch for it, but I do not think it devoid of foundation. The farce of preliminary negotiations has to be played out, and the intervention of the King of the Belgians must be admitted to be a masterpiece of ingenuity. It is, however, extremely doubtful whether his Belgian Majesty will accept the perilous honor thrust upon him; but the object is evidently to gain time, so as to avoid a premature collapse of the Congress scheme, and the negotiations which the overtures to be made to him involve will necessarily occupy several weeks.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Pontifical Government is said to have accepted the proposed Congress. The reply of Prussia was expected on the 21st.

The Paris Pays infers from the tone of the Russian journals that Russia will accede to the Congress.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times asserts to the belief that a Congress will meet at all was losing ground daily.

Le France asserts that several acceptances have been received, but no refusal as yet.

THE MEXICAN QUESTION.

The London Times, in its City article, says mercantile advices show that the difficulties of the French intervention had been greatly increased, owing to the fatal error committed by the Emperor NAPOLEON in giving license to the ecclesiastical and reactionary party the moment his army had succeeded in occupying the capital, while the name of France also suffered an incalculable loss of prestige from the honors conferred upon such persons as MIRAMON and MARQUEZ. At the time the consequences of this course seemed to be most threatening, as respects the impulse to resistance. The arrival of Gen. BAZAINE seems to have been regarded as opening up a better prospect.

A Madrid telegram states that the Spanish Government supports the candidature of the Archduke MAXIMILIAN for the Mexican throne.

One thousand men were to sail from Cherbourg for Mexico on the 23d of November.

CONTINENTAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

A bill had been submitted to the Council of State asking supplementary credits for 21,000,000 francs. The credits are stated to be required to meet the expenses of the Mexican expedition.

It is noticed that since the Emperor's speech the Moniteur publishes on the Polish insurrection only the news given in the Russian papers. Before the speech it used to give the Polish versions also.

The Paris papers had been invited to be milder in their Polish articles.

The Paris Patrie publishes the petition of the Franco-Polish Committee to the French Senate asking for the recognition of the Poles as belligerents.

The Paris Bourse on the 20th was firmer, the Rentes advanced to 67.40.

The Bank of France continued to lose bullion.

DENMARK AND GERMANY.

The King of Denmark had received the secession deputation. His Majesty thanked the President for his address, and stated that the new common Constitution for Denmark and Schleswig has only just been mentioned, because it was an important step that he had been desirous of carefully weighing, as the Reichsrath had also done.

A Hamburg telegram says:

"A meeting was attempted to be held here by the inhabitants of Schleswig and Holstein, who had arrived here for that purpose. They were, however, dispersed by the police in three different places. They finally proceeded to the village of Ottensen, where the meeting took place."

Addresses were voted to the Prince of Augustenburg, and the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha.

The Prince of Augustenburgh was requested in the address voted to him to place himself at the head of the people. The other members of the Diet who were not present at the meeting, on account of its having been prohibited by the police, have been asked to sign the address.

The claim of Prince FREDERIC, of Augustenburg to the dukedom of Schleswig-Holstein excites much attention.

He has issued a proclamation to the people of that province, declaring his assumption of the government.

and pronouncing further Danish rule an usurpation. He does not call the people to repel force by force, but appeals to the German federation to protect his rights.

It is asserted that the Grand Duke of Weimar and Duke of Saxe Meiningen have recognized the Prince's claim.

The Official Prussian journal says that the question has now assumed an international character.

It is asserted that Prussia is making active warlike preparations in view of possible hostilities with Denmark.

ITALY.

The official Gazette of Turin publishes a royal decree proclaiming an amnesty. It annuls the penal punishments awarded in the Neapolitan provinces for all crimes excepting those connected with brigandage and ordinary offences.

The amnesty extends to all offences against the Press laws, and all persons who have evaded the conscription or acted in contravention of the laws relating to the National Guard. The report preceding the decree states, that the enthusiastic reception and other manifestations which the King has met with during his journey, have proved how deeply the unity of Italy is rooted in the mind of the population. Having nothing more to fear from the efforts of enemies, the Ministers have deemed it their duty to second the numerous ideas conceived in the heart of the King.

PRUSSIA.

In the Upper House of the Diet, during the debate upon the draft of the address to the King, Count BUDMERS protested against the paragraph expressing gratitude to the Government for the measures adopted against the spread of the insurrection in Poland. The Count maintained that the insurrection had only for its object the liberation of Poland from Russian rule.

Herr VON BISMARK SCHONHAUSEN, in reply, said Count BUDMERS may believe what he says. The Government, however, was obliged to judge in accordance with facts. The Government has proofs in hand that the insurrection was not directed alone against Russia. The Government has, however, a political, social and moral interest in the movement in Russian-Poland not being victorious. An independent Poland would always be a source of danger for the Russian Monarchy, and would occupy the greater portion of the army. We must not allow a movement to be successful which sells itself with unheard-of crimes, and which delights in the apotheosis of assassination.

The address was then put to the vote and agreed to by 82 to 8.

THE SITUATION.

VIRGINIA—CHATTANOOGA—KNOXVILLE.

From the Richmond Examiner, Nov. 30.

It is quite possible that a battle will have been joined on the field of Chancellors before these lines meet the reader's eye. Although Winter has evidently begun in Virginia, the Federal Government has decreed that neither rain nor mud shall prevent the "Army of the Potomac" from its last venture. The long steps of the old adversaries confront. The first blood has been drawn, and the good omen has once more fallen in favor of the Confederacy. Gen. Meade is perhaps the best officer who has commanded his often beaten army since McClellan, but he has not displayed a spark of genius; nor is there any reason to believe that he will be more successful in the enterprise he has undertaken than his predecessor. But it is useless to speculate on this great matter. The Lord of Hosts now holds his hand upon it, and arbitrament may be known before the sun goes down.

We have the Northern accounts of the late miserable affair at Lookout Mountain. They will create as much surprise as BRAGG's vague and gloomy dispatch lately occasioned. The discrepancy of the two accounts is of a most unusual character. For once the Federal Generals do not claim the advantages which the Confederates were very ready to award them. They claim, it is true, a decisive victory; but one of them has six hundred prisoners, while the other has only the authority of the veracious HOOKER for two thousand in all. These official bulletins were written after the evacuation of Lookout Mountain, where our loss, if anywhere, took place. They represent the Federal loss in killed and wounded outright, but they appear to obviate the fight on Mission Ridge, where HARDEE is reported to have made away with "twenty thousand!" Contrasting these accounts with those in THURSDAY's telegraph and BRAGG's dispatch, one is struck with wonder. It is clear that one party or the other was ill-informed. The error can scarcely be on the Federal side, for they would know the number of prisoners in their hands and exaggerate them. Perhaps it will be discovered that the 5,000 missing, which our reporters suppose to have been taken by the enemy, were only runaways and cowards, who scattered, and made for their homes, instead of returning to their commands when the battle was over. The loss of guns remains—an ugly fact.

The position of LONGSTREET in East Tennessee is the subject of frequent and most anxious inquiry. The news from that quarter, as far as it goes, is very good; but the long delay in concluding is a very cause of great anxiety. We hear that Knoxville is invested on all sides; that BURNSIDE and his whole force is shut up; that all other Federal troops in East Tennessee have left the country by way of Cumberland Gap; that LONGSTREET is starving his adversary into surrender. But we do not know what amount of provisions may have been collected in Knoxville. It is not probable that there was enough collected there, in the short space of time which has elapsed since the advance of the enemy into East Tennessee, to support a long siege; but they may possibly have enough to subsist seven or eight thousand men for a week or two. Now that GRANT has lifted BRAGG from his front, he may prefer sending a part of his army to relieve BURNSIDE to an advance upon the Confederate rear at the Chickamauga. These are reflections which tremble the pleasure with which the public peruses the cheerful telegram from East Tennessee. But they may be relieved at any moment by an authoritative statement of BURNSIDE's surrender. Meantime, we can see little ground for apprehending a disaster in that quarter. If the Federal forces at Chattanooga moved on Longstreet he would not wait to be enveloped; and a safe retreat into Virginia or North Carolina is always open to him.

From the Richmond Examiner, Nov. 27.

It is not probable that the operations commenced at Lookout Mountain have been concluded. If we are to judge the future by the past, GRANT will press his success as he did after Grand Gulf—let us hope with a very different result. The late army of Tennessee, now of Northern Georgia, must be sensible that it fights on the Chickamauga for home and all that it contains. Unless its handling is absolutely imbecile, it will prove difficult to move from the banks of the Chickamauga; and GRANT is likely to find its fields not less fatal to the laurels of Chattanooga, than to those won by ROSECRANS on the same spot with more facility.

The least favorable fact of the situation is the separation of LONGSTREET, with one of the best corps of the Confederate army, from either of the two scenes on which its presence might turn the scale of fortune.

THE CONFEDERACY STILL INTACT.

From the Richmond Examiner.

The Yankees have overrun a large tract of territory, and have entrapped, by artful jugglery and cunning disembling, some of the Border States into a semblance of union. But the great force and power of resistance of the Confederacy is still intact. Its armies are confident and defiant, and its resources still amply sufficient, under proper management, to furnish all that a people, earnestly struggling for independence, should consider as necessary.

They, on the other hand, have accumulated a debt which, even under the garbled statements of their own unscrupulous officials, no amount of suppression can cause to appear less than enormous. For the first time, too, the appearance of actual, positive want is making itself visible. Hitherto starved off by the fictitious prosperity of an artificial system, the necessary return to sober reality cause to be appalling. Dear taxes and want will soon extend through all the ramifications of society, and the unreasoning crowd will have impressed upon them a conviction of the fearfully exhausting drafts they have made upon their future resources.

At that very time, too, they will find, not only that their work is not half done, but that many of the evils foretold as inevitably consequent upon its termination, are already pressing upon them. The idea of liberty and the entire perversion of the form of government upon which they founded such lofty boasts, would be, in their opinion, totally compounded by the retention of that material prosperity which, under the Union, contrasted with the largest freedom. That the Southern States should be reduced to provinces, and the balance of an equal Confederacy destroyed, would not cause them any repinings, if the same wealth could still be drawn from them in their changed condition. The cherished guarantees of individual liberty would be yielded without a murmur for the boon of plentiful markets and abundant gains.

This vulgar consolation will be denied them. When called on to pay the price of the success they have obtained they will find that all they have won has become worthless. Even now, in those Border States, where the work of conquest is facilitated by the existence of a Yankee party, and by proximity to the central power, there are symptoms of that division among themselves and consequent disorganization which is destined, as surely as disease follows debauch, to revenge them on the local, if not the evils they have visited upon the South.

The case of Tennessee and Kentucky is loss by the late system, and are still more doubtful whether any legislative measures, or any device of financial genius, will ever exclude the money changer from our Confederate temple. Driven out at one door they return at another, sometimes by a secret passage, sometimes by the gate called Bankruptcy.

The various shifts adopted to supply the want of some general organic provision for the withdrawal of the surplus circulation, and its reduction into funded debt, have all failed of their object. The rates of interest were high, but not high enough to attract men, whose range of credit went on extending, day by day, far beyond such petty considerations as two cents a day, and eight per cent. per annum. The attempts to drive in these eight per cents. had been the deplorable results of shaking the faith of the people in the honesty of the Government, and the gradual reduction of the rate of interest was no better calculated to soothe the feelings than the well known Irish method of breaking bad news by putting the different stages in successive postscripts to the same letter. It was virtually repudiation on a small scale, and the premature application of such a desperate remedy must be regarded as ominous for the credit of the Government.

Men no longer repose implicit confidence in Confederate bonds. Now and then we hear the old patriotic phrases: "If these bonds are not good, nothing is good, for if we are subjugated we can sell nothing our own." But men are beginning to see the want of logical sequence in this popular syllogism; and for the last few months the two ideas of subjugation and repudiation have been steadily diverging from one another, and it is now conceivable that the Government might be bankrupt and yet the country not subjugated. The old view is the better for the honor of our cause; but the new mode of looking at the matter is certainly in perfect accordance with experience. As MACHIAVELLI saw long ago, gold and silver are not the sinews of war; and we can thrash the Yankees with empty pockets as we have thrashed them with ragged trousers, and jackets out at elbows.

So this patriotic consideration of the supposed essential connection between the success of our cause and the success of our financial measures has lost its weight. In fact, all patriotic considerations have lost their weight in the general demoralization of a long and a prolonged war. Our hopes of financial reform are based rather on popular disgust than on a popular sense of duty. The people are disgusted with the confusion and uncertainty which the swelling plethora of paper money has introduced into every department of business and every branch of domestic economy.

No one knows what to charge for his wares, except that he cannot charge too much. A per centage of profit is an obsolete idea; for the enlarging volume of the currency of itself requires a heavy addition to the original cost, if the holder wishes merely to indemnify himself for the first outlay; and the "rule of the thumb," as now applied to business matters, is the wildest rule on record. An advance of thirty or forty per cent. a week on articles of prime necessity is a phenomenon which has ceased to excite the slightest astonishment; and in the general despair of a fixed standard, some are reverting to the clumsy method of barter; some are making contracts to be adjusted at a distant future, in which it is hoped the relations of value will be more settled than they are at present.

The disgust extends itself to the externals of Confederate money—as well it may. The people are disgusted with every shade of Confederate notes; with every line of the coarse engravings; with the lapsided Capitol at Richmond; with the portraits of distinguished Cabinet officers and statesmen, who frown or smirk from their pillory in the vignettes. Any change would be welcomed which should put Mr. MEMMINGER's assignats out of sight—"say where, anywhere out of the world."

We count largely, then, on this general loathing, on this surfeit of paper and printer's ink, and under the pressure of the popular opinion, Congress will doubtless attempt to devise some comprehensive and vigorous measures for reducing the inflated currency and preventing the return of this paper deluge. To be effective these measures must be simple and the personal agency required must be reduced to a minimum. An elaborate scheme, involving the cooperation of the different States; or corporations and of individuals, could never be brought into working order at all. A scheme which should require a new army of collectors would be too slow in its application; and long before the full organization of the Confederate Humane Society could be effected, every spark of life would have died from the sufferer.

This is a case which demands instant relief. Expedition is everything. If the plan of a forced loan be adopted, it must be based on the assessment of the present year; and it might be as well to have the present collectors qualified to take in the proceeds of the new levy. The days of grace must be shortened as much as practicable; the accounts closed rigidly at the appointed time, and heavy forfeits exacted of delinquents. If this should be done during the first days of the session of Congress, before next Spring we should have a wholesome stringency in the money market, which could be kept in healthy tone by compelling the periodical funding of the new issues. To these steps we seem to be driven by the necessities of our position.

The operation of such a system may seem harsh in individual cases, but it cannot be harsher than the conscription system, which has blighted the prospects of tens of thousands and marred some of their noblest and dearest plans of life. Like the conscription, it will teach men that they belong to their country and not to themselves—a lesson which is not always best learned by voluntary sacrifices. Of course, the system must be carried out thoroughly, and to this end must be self-working, so far as human wit can devise. Trust to personal agency, and we shall have but another illustration of the old saw, "A good beginning makes a bad ending." It was of a financial reform that TACITUS wrote: "Acribus et firmis falsa initia incertioribus finis."

THE FINANCES.

From the Richmond Examiner.

All are agreed that taxation must be employed as a means to uphold the credit of the currency and reduce prices. But taxation alone will not suffice. If the Government brings its Treasury notes to the par value of gold, it must be put upon the legal footing of gold, and be endowed with its functions as a business medium.

The fact is, the country is without any such legal medium at present, and will continue to be without one for a long period of time, unless Treasury notes be made a legal tender. And yet the States being expressly prohibited by the Constitution from making anything but the precious metals a legal tender, it is the imperative duty of Congress, both morally and constitutionally, to supply one. Congress, by prodigal issues of paper money, having driven out of circulation gold and silver, it is simply impossible, for that reason, if for no other, any longer to look to that source for a legal tender. Is there, then, to be no legal tender in the country during the war, and for an indefinite time afterwards? Is the eating canker of interests to be allowed to go on with its insatiable appetite?

The public interest, as well as justice, demands that every class, and, if possible, every man, certainly every property-holder, should be interested in the public debt. This will be one of the surest pledges of its ultimate redemption. Every property-holder not so interested will be interested in relieving his property from the burdens of taxation by repudiation. This every man sees who is invited to invest in Confederate bonds. And it is in vain to invite A. to buy bonds when he sees his neighbor B. refuse to receive Treasury notes in payment of debts upon the ground alone that they will, in the end, prove worthless. It is a standing reproach to the currency to allow a class, and a large class, at that, to stand sullen, and cast that imputation on the faith of the Government and the success of our most righteous cause.

But why should not Treasury notes be made a legal tender? Certainly not because the creditor will be injured if he gets notes or stock to be hereafter redeemed in gold. It is a fair transaction, and can only be impeached on the ground that the debt will not be so redeemed. Is that the reason that deters Congress from stamping its notes with the legal characteristic of money? Is it from tenderness to the creditor class, and to save that harmless amid the general ruin which they prognosticate will overwhelm the Bankers? It is the reason, we suppose, that Congress of notes deposited when the power that issues them stamp them with its own want of confidence. The debt will be paid and must be paid, so says the brave hearted WIGFALL.

But the efficacy of the recommended measure is doubted. One fact within the brief financial experience of the Government will refute this notion, if when we have already said has not done so. When these Confederate notes were first issued, the business community were at a loss what value to attach to them. The farmers, some were loth, others positively refused, to receive them for army supplies. But a convention of the Presidents of the Southern banks assembled at Richmond, and Mr. CASKIE, who saw to the bottom of the business, proposed that Confederate currency should be taken in settlement of balances due the banks. In a solitary patriotism which is worthy of imitation, the proposition was adopted, and at once Treasury notes passed everywhere as money, as powerful was the patronage of those corporations. What was this but making Treasury notes a legal tender in the business of the banks? If the banks had continued to do their usual amount of business, their action would, to a great extent, have sustained the value of the Treasury notes. But after they closed up business, the force of their action ceased to be felt. It is not difficulty to conceive the disastrous effects upon the public credit and upon the war which a contrary course on the part of the banks would have produced. But among their way clearly in the business, the banks did for the Government what the Government ought to have done for them.

If the banks had refused to receive Treasury notes in settlement of balances, one good result would have ensued: Congress would have been compelled to have declared their notes endowed with the legal characteristics of money.

How did the Northern Congress act in respect to this vital point? They did not imitate our Southern sagas, and flood the country with a currency which they neglected, and afterward refused to make money, yet heavily and dishonestly, upon its forehead, such note was declared to be a legal tender. This lies at the bottom of the superior credit of greenbacks. Such was its efficacy, that under a series of military disasters United States Treasury notes for a long time stood at par with gold.

THE FOOD QUESTION.

A HARD CASE.

The following communication appears in the Richmond Examiner:

Is the Government kept on the ruin of the farmers of Virginia? Is the goose that lays the golden egg to be sacrificed?

I am informed by one of the Government agents today, that he had received orders to visit all the farms in King William and notify the owners that one-tenth of the straw stacks and top-fodder would be acquired of them by a "late construction" of the law on that subject, which says that "one-tenth of all cured fodder and hay shall be seized every, &c. When was straw or stacks known as "cured fodder or hay?"

Were we compelled to haul fresh (they say they require) one-tenth of our straw and stacks, unbaled, to the nearest depot, (eight miles,) we could not accomplish it by the Spring, even if the weather and roads were good, with all of our teams! What madness rules the hour!

If the course now pursued by the Government is persisted in, we shall be compelled to sell out and try some other occupation, for we shall be ruined.

By the several (three) raids and incursions of the enemy, we, in this county, have lost all of our mules and horses, and half of our slaves. The mules and horses we have been obliged to replace at ruinous prices, and have made about half crops; one-tenth of these have been ungrudgingly given up to the Government, and our wheat taken at one-fourth of the price it is now selling for, and the balance of our crops taken at impressment prices.

How, then, are we to pay for these mules and horses, clothe our families and servants, and pay our State taxes? Many of us in this county have not made corn enough for our own support, owing to the loss of slaves and teams, still we have to give up one-tenth of what have made, and buy the deficiency at $12 and $15 per bushel. Is not this hard? Ought not counties devasted by the enemy to have been exempt from this tithe tax? Many of us have almost concluded to hire out our slaves, rent out our farms until the war is over, and live as best we can. If we are to sell at impressment prices, and pay tithes, how can we purchase groceries, clothes for our children, plows and farming utensils of all kinds, (for these things don't last always,) salt, shoes, &c., at the prices now demanded? We shall all be ruined, and be compelled every year to sell some of the few slaves left us by the enemy, to pay expenses; and yet we are classed among that ville herd, the "extortioners," by most of the Richmond papers.

I have scribbled off these few unconnected remarks for your perusal, and if you can frame an editorial from them, you will not only oblige, but may be rendering some aid and comfort to many farmers on the verge of ruin.

PAMUNKEY.

THE RESTAURANTS.

From the Richmond Examiner.

PERSICUS.—The plea of short supply of meats as an excuse for high prices does not hold good, when we come to the restaurants, the only true caterers to the epicure's taste. At no season do we remember having seen so many fine bucks, fawns, and wild game of all varieties, as are daily displayed at the various restaurant fronts, in the show windows and upon the tables. They are killed in the upper counties, and brought to Richmond by the hundred.

NO SPECULATION IN AUGUSTA.

The city authorities of Augusta have prohibited the purchase within that city of any article of produce for speculation. No man is to be permitted to buy any article of the kind and sell it at any time for more than he paid for it. To enforce the observance of this ordinance, a detective has been appointed, with plenary power, to prevent or report violations of the ordinance.

THE PRISONERS.

From the Richmond Examiner, Nov. 30.

About eighty miserable looking wretches were sent down from the Army of the Rappahannock, on Saturday, under the various charges of theft, insubordination, desertion, and similar crimes. Among the party were J. H. LUMPKIN, Company E, Twenty-eighth Virginia cavalry, under sentence of death for desertion; and Ralph ANDERSON, of the First Virginia battalion, charged with advising desertion, and suspected of being a spy.

Maj. WARD, who attempted to escape from prison on Tuesday, it appears, is a member of the Pennsylvania State Senate, instead of the United States Senate. He is a strong Lincolnite, and a particular friend of Gov. CURTIN. The latter, it is understood, says he must be had in the Pennsylvania Legislature if it costs fifty Confederate officers to buy him back. Upon being returned to prison Tuesday night, he was placed in close confinement, but on yesterday was released by special order of Gen. WINDER, and permitted to range his old quarters.

During Tuesday night a number of Yankee deserters confined in Palmer's Building, opposite to Castle Thunder, succeeded in making their way from their confinement into the commissary-room in the rear by cutting through the wall, and were in the act of making their escape from the building when the discovery was made. Five of them had already gotten outside, and were making off to the best of their ability, when the guards and officers of the building closed on them, and arrested them.

THE QUESTION OF SUPPLIES FOR THE PRISONERS

From the Richmond Examiner, Nov. 23.

There is but a single ground upon which the privilege of supplying their prisoners in the Confederacy with rations and other necessaries can be accorded to the Yankee Government. Of the two horns of the dilemma so tauntingly offered us, we can accept only that which exposes our poverty in defending our humanity. We cannot acknowledge that we are, in the malignant language of our enemies, "desperately barbarous," and therefore neglectful of the usages of civilized war. We must, then, gratify their malice by confessing that we are "desperately poor," and being unable to supply these comforts, delicacies and the numerous comforts their grateful country desires for them, we are forced to devolve upon their compatriots, native or adopted, the pleasing task of furnishing those luxuries which the ravages of war or the strictness of the blockade preclude the Confederacy from giving them.

The Yankee policy with respect to the exchange of prisoners has been clearly exposed. It is based upon the simple principle that our men are intrinsically worth more than their's, and that if they continue to hold our prisoners and to allow their sons to remain in our hands they will be the gainers. Such, in fact, is the whole scheme of the war. If, by dint of superior numbers and a lavish expenditure of blood, they can inflict such loss upon the South as to render it incapable of further resistance (their point, they think, is gained. It is useless to say that this reasoning is as stupid in a military, as it is shocking in a moral point of view. But it carries conviction to the minds of a set of men whose whole conduct has proceeded upon the assumption that superiority of numbers rendered success a mathematical certainty.

Whatever course may be elected, standers will, of course, be heaped upon us. We shall be accused of starving our prisoners to death if we refuse admission to provisions, if we admit them, we shall be charged with starving them in order to force their own people to supply them without expense to us. Lying persons will no doubt be ready too to assure the Yankee public that the supplies were stolen from the private use of the President or the Commissary-General. We must be entirely heedless of what is to be said of our conduct. The world in general will not believe the Yankees, and if they did, the force of public opinion and moral influence, which are so much talked about, have not had any visible effect upon our success or our misfortunes. Let us, then, do what is right and expedient, and not trouble ourselves about Yankee calumnies.

Let our enemies be distinctly informed that their prisoners are as well treated as the condition of the country permits; that they are not exposed to as great privations as our own brave troops, and that if they are forced to drink the muddy water of the James, it is a hardship shared with them by the citizens of Richmond, who have learned to bear it with fortitude. Let them be told, moreover, that if root searcing is to try our people, it is neither proper nor prudent that they should witness the spectacle of thousands of well-fed men, who have been the direct agents of their own sufferings, while they are pinched with hunger. Common sense will show that grave consequences might ensue from such a state of things. Let them be told that if they wish to relieve themselves, it can be done at once by the legitimate operation of the cartel. This course will soon settle the question. The contrary will send Lookout at home, and condemn our brave men to continued imprisonment and wretchedness.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

—The Richmond Examiner says:

"The surgeons, 115 in number, recently exchanged, are returning, or are preparing to return, to their various posts of duty in the armies. A few furloughs have been granted to visit their homes; but it can be said to their credit that there were but few applications made. Among the surgeons returned is Dr. GRAHAM, recently held by the Yankees as a hostage for Dr. RUCKER, who has escaped, and Surgeon JONES, attached to Maj. MOSBY's command."

—The Richmond Examiner has this indiscreet paragraph: "We observe that late Northern papers announce the arrest, in Baltimore, of Ex-Mayor William LEMMON, of Washington, D. C., but who has been a refugee in Richmond since the breaking out of the war. Mr. LEMMON has been absent from Richmond about a month, having run the blockade through the enemy's lines for the purpose of arranging his private matters at Washington, with the intention of returning South and establishing his permanent home here. He has been sent to Fort McHenry. Lieut. BILLS and party, of Richmond, captured on the eastern shore of Virginia, recently, have also been sent to Fort McHenry."

—Mr. GARRETT, the Administration candidate for the Senatorship from Georgia, said who, in his speech before the Legislature, praised the Administration to the skies, proclaiming JEFF. DAVIS as a "second WASHINGTON," received, on the choice of Senator, but fifteen votes out of one hundred and ninety-two! "Pretty rough," exclaims the Richmond Examiner.

—The Conscript act has been suspended in the Counties of Rabun, Towns, Habersham, White, Lumpkin, Dawson, Gilmer, Fannin and Union, Georgia. The Atlanta Wasthome believes this to be done in consequence of the scarcity of agricultural labor, which has produced great scarcity of provisions.

—The Savannah papers announce the death of Judge JOHN C. NORRIS, for upwards of twenty years Judge of the United States District Court there, and for some time past the Confederate States District Attorney.

AFFAIRS IN TENNESSEE.

Thanksgiving Day in Nashville—Sight of the News of Victory at Lookout Mountain—Grounds of Unwonted Rejoicing—Presumptive Fruits of this Success—Thanksgiving Dinner in Hospital—Nashville in a Bustle—Increase of Trade.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Friday, Nov. 27, 1863.

Yesterday was duly observed here as a National Thanksgiving, according to the President's appointment. A more brilliantly beautiful day has never greeted this honored and honoring anniversary. Not a cloud was seen in the sky, nor did a dry leaf rustle by the slightest breeze during all the day. Several of the churches held religious services, and respectably numerous audiences, considering the condition of the city, gathered to render fitting praise and homage to Him to whose protecting mercy our beloved country owes all its past triumphs and prosperity, as it must continue to owe them in the years to come.

The stirring news from the front had reached us—a little vaguely—the night before. Thanksgiving morning confirmed, and more than confirmed, what the telegraph had told us on the previous day. Six thousand prisoners taken, fifty-two pieces of artillery captured, Lookout Mountain Top, Missionary Ridge, the enemy's strongest and most strongly intrenched positions all ours; BRAGG routed and in full retreat, and our gallant battalions vigorously pursuing, with the prospect of other signal successes; what Thanksgiving Day, in the memory of this generation at least, has thrilled the hearts of a grateful and patriotic people with intelligence so exhilarating as this?

Among all classes of loyal people here, the joy at this result was the heartiest and most unreserved that I have seen evinced since the war began. Chickamauga, with its huge losses, was a bitter memory, and the heart burned to retrieve that dismal day. The precarious position of our army there for weary weeks, with hunger pinching our brave soldiers, and threatening to drive them back—the formidable numbers which the rebels were known to have massed in front of Chattanooga—the strength of their position, with the determination to hold it at all hazards, and hurl BURNSIDE, in addition, from the fastnesses of East Tennessee—the immense importance to the Union cause, and to the prospect of the speedy winding up of the rebellion, of overwhelming BRAGG and advancing with irresistible force into the very heart of the rebel territory—these things and wrought a painful anxiety, the sudden removal of which by this signal success of Gen. GRANT and his gallant coadjutors, changing by a blow the entire aspect of affairs, has awakened a joy that is deep and almost enthusiastic.

What if to follow this momentous victory, it is perhaps not very hard to foreshadow. If BRAGG could not hold Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, with all their natural advantages for defence, will he be able to hold Rome or Atlanta, or Montgomery? Will the Gulf States afford him a position where he can make successful head against the trained masses now sure to be poured against him? And the Gulf States, brought under the rightful sway of the Stars and Stripes, what prospect will remain to Charleston of maintaining a successful conflict between DAHLGREN and GILLMORE on the one hand, and GRANT's victorious columns on the other? And Charleston fallen, as fall she must, what becomes of the Confederacy, hemmed in between MEADE on the North, BURNSIDE on the West and GRANT on the South? The struggle, under these circumstances, must, from the nature of things, be of very brief duration. And even should desperation succeed in lengthening out its life a little, the end cannot be very long delayed. The proud fabric of misguided ambition must fall, and its ruins furnish an impressive lesson which will admonish and instruct the people for all time. Thus the effect, moral and material, of this victory at this particular juncture, is of an importance that may well inspire the liveliest emotions of gratitude and joy.

A keener zest was given by this news for the enjoyment of the Thanksgiving dinner, provided in all the hospitals here, on a very liberal scale. The scene in the various refectories was highly animating. The benevolent forethought of Northern friends, directed, by the practical skill and assiduity of ladies connected with the Sanitary Commission, and of volunteer ladies of the City devoted to the interests of Union soldiers, produced a sumptuous repast. So many of the invalids surrounded the groaning boards, and did their part so vigorously, that nearly all for that day, at least, seemed hale and well. This dinner, thus provided, had an excellent effect. It is much, for the soldier suffering in the service of his country, to feel that his friends and those on whose behalf he has toiled and bled, remember him with kindness. It is balm to his wounds, and nerves his arm for encountering fresh dangers and sacrifices for those who do not forget him in his bitter trial hours. But to forget the soldier, and fail to minister to his needs, will never be a record against our fair country-women, at least, when the facts of this grim war shall have passed into impartial history.

Nashville never, surely, presented so bustling and animated a spectacle as now. Its streets literally swarm with humanity, reminding one at times of some of the densely-crowded thoroughfares of New-York. As the great gate, opening to the Army of the Cumberland, now the special cynosure of military operations, crowds from the East are pouring in hither with every arrival of the cars from Louisville. Soldiers, recovered from sickness in hospitals further North, or returning from brief furlough, or sent to join the army for the first time, stream through the streets as the cars reach the depot. Captured guerrillas, escorted by guards, are picturesquely interspersed with contrabands, with persons arriving on business, or come hither to visit sick or wounded friends. The narrow streets are blocked up with omnibuses, six-mules army wagons, carts, carriages, express wagons, cavalry horses, ambulances, and not unfrequently long lines of horses and mules for the front, to supply the waste of war. The recent rains have raised the river, and two or three dozen steamboats and propellers lie at the chief landing, covering the banks with multitudinous boxes, barrels, bags, bales, awaiting transportation to their appropriate depots, or to points occupied by regiments not remote from the city. The work of moving these copious supplies requires a large force of humans and quadrupeds both, and a very lively, sometimes amusing picture, is daily presented at this point.

The business of the city has also greatly improved within the past few months. The high prices which nearly all commodities realize here have tempted adventurers to brave whatever risks may lurk in the road between Louisville and Nashville, and open shops for the disposal of their wares. The "Shrewd Jew," as Falstaff has it, abounds here as he does everywhere, where money is to be made, and the keen black eyes and marked physiognomies of Chatham-street meet you at every turn. Several well-known Eastern firms have branches here, and some of the spacious 100 or 120 feet deep stores, abandoned by owners or occupant at the Federal occupation of Nashville, now greet the eye with their inviting display of goods, and the ear with the hum of profitable traffic. Among the fair purchasers are seen more and more frequently those

Gen. Meade Prepared to Give Battle.

COMMENTS ON THE LATE MOVEMENTS.

SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE N. Y. TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 4.

Mr. E. A. PAUL sends the following to-night:

"The enemy attempted to cross the Rapidan at Raccoon Ford last night, (Thursday,) in force, having artillery, infantry and cavalry.

"They were driven back in disorder by Gen. Custer's Cavalry division.

"The first report received at headquarters was to the effect that Lee's whole army was advancing, whereupon Gen. MEADE order preparations to give them battle.

"No further demonstration was made by the enemy this morning.

"Pleasant, to-day, but an editorial, which is supposed to have an official inspiration, which characterizes the retrograde movement of MEADE as a force of the same sort as that which permitted Lee to escape from his clutches at Williamsport, after the battle of Gettysburgh, and, thus the retreat from Culpepper to Manassas. The writer asserts that MEADE was ordered to advance on Lee and give him battle whenever found; that so long as the Army of the Potomac is guided by its present leaders it will fail to inspire confidence in the public, and that the system of active operations has not closed.

"The following is the article from the Star alluded to above. It appears in the "The Army of the Potomac and its Hesitating Generals." It reads:

"So long as our army in this quarter continues to be guided by its present commander in the field, it is more clear than it will fail to command public confidence. Though the movement amounted only to a reconnoissance in force, its purpose was certainly to ascertain battle whenever found.

"There can be no mistake in this fact, though it is now sought to be denied. We know, further, that the course for active operations under active commanders in this section has not closed, as is being represented more or less by newspapers. So if Lee, relying upon a contemptuous of the chronic hesitancy that has effected the counsels of Gen. MEADE, ventures to retaliate Lee may considerably from his own army, which he has yet time at least to attempt, the Government will promptly seek to make him pay dear for his temerity, as our Army of the Potomac is as ready at this moment to move again as it was when undertaking so to do a few days since."

DESPATCH TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 4.

All was quiet in front of the Army of the Potomac, to-day. Last night the enemy made a reconnoissance in force, consisting of artillery, infantry and cavalry, and crossed at Raccoon Ford with the probable intention of ascertaining our strength and position. But they were repulsed by a detachment of our cavalry corps, and quickly retreated to the south side of the Rapidan.

We occupy Culpepper with a cavalry force.

THE FIFTEENTH ARMY CORPS.

Marches of the Corps—Its Past and Present Embers—Duties of the War—Reserve Duty.

BRIDGE, GILES COUNTY, TENNESSEE, Tuesday, Nov. 24, 1863.

I wrote you last from Eastport, Mississippi, while the left wing Sixteenth army corps was crossing the Tennessee in rear of the Fifteenth, and moving to join the Army of the Cumberland. The crossing was effected in due season, and the several divisions moving on the direct line to Huntsville, when some cause produced a sudden defection northward by different lines converging at Pulaski, a village seventy-five miles from Nashville, on the railroad to Decatur. From thence the Fifteenth corps and Gen. SHERMAN moved eastward thirty miles to Fayetteville, to which point the cars were running. Thence they were hurried on, and lost to us in the main army and in the glowing future.

The left wing, arriving two days later at Pulaski, met its inevitable fortune. We had picketed and built and guarded railroads, till, to escape, we shouldered our knapsacks and trudged gally across the country for four weeks. At the end of this, an order—with a handsome apology, it is true, but still an order—and the left wing (ominous cognomen) must remain behind, and open the railroad from Columbia to Decatur. Gen. DODGE made his headquarters at Pulaski, and one brigade of growlers turned aside twelve miles to this place—a station with half a dozen deserted, or miserably occupied houses.

In the early part of this war we saw service. New-Madrid, Island No. 10, Farmington, Iuka and Corinth made a good record for 1862, and we willingly spent the Winter in garrison. But when we were kept there through all of Vicksburgh, it was severely felt, and we followed SHERMAN loyally to a new campaign. After going so far, to be stopped and sent back to the old, dull work, is tough, Sir—very tough. The good soldier says, "Whatever is is right."

For our journey—the march of a column is the gear of an army resembles rather a great excursion, except in the beautiful facility of movement which system and discipline produce. True, nothing is undone which would render the approach of an enemy less speedy, or his repulse more certain. But the knowledge that the ground has been already cleared relieves the mind of that strained expectation which the contrary inspires, and divests the future of a dark uncertainty.

From Memphis along the Railroad to Corinth and Iuka, the movement of armies for two years has trodden out all husbandry. Great tracts of weeds wound a stack of chimneys remind you of where a farm has been, and in a journey of one hundred miles we can, perhaps, half-a-dozen fields of stunted grain, and twice as many spiritless attempts at cotton. In the towns and railway stations, a sickly life is kept alive by traffic in the districts of Northern goods which escape the meshes of the treasury and military restrictions. Some of these towns are beautiful, for years, and traces of intelligence and refinement are not found. The people are thoroughly subdued.

Crossing the river, introduced us to a abundance of meat and grain. Of all but these coarser necessaries life is scarcely procurable (including intelligence,) amounting almost to destitution. Five dollars a yard for calico reminded us of the famine prices of the Confederacy proper. A general attempt to supply the want of sugar, by tolerable sorghum, resulted in an abundance of excellent molasses, free from the acid taste it sometimes bears, but no sugar. With one accord the people seem listless, and tired, and dependent of the war. This was the tone of a small captured on Paris to BRAGG's army. Complaints were universal. One old gentleman writes to his son that he "does not like to advise him to desert, but that a deserter is quite a popular man in Tennessee now-a-days." Another old codger writes: "The Yankees are with us locusts, but I have prayed the Lord soon to arrest their career."

On general army movements I could write you almost as much from the bottom of a well. We came from the front of Nashville, forty-five miles of the route by wagon-train. Gen. GRANT is busy with the Quartermaster and Commissariat of the Department of the Cumberland, removing large numbers of redundant officers, and sending thousands of worn-down mules north to recruit, and replacing them with fresh ones. We should have this road completed to the river by New-Years, but it is difficult to give the fact a positive significance in the military future. Apparently, we constitute that reserve which is now recognized as a necessary part of all armies, and are put here because we can be kept cheaply, and build the railroad because it will be useful to ourselves while we remain.

We recommend have under a lively apprehension that only our coming could relieve the Army of the Cumberland from wintering further north. When we reached here, the Fifteenth corps was hurried forward under the belief that BRAGG had moved the bulk of his force toward Bussacks, and must be checked by a counter movement.

Both dangers have passed away, and now we shall see what we shall see. W. R.

THE WAR IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Attack Upon a Band of Guerrillas—Four of Them Killed and Sixty-two Made Prisoners.

WASHINGTON, N. C., Friday, Nov. 27, 1863.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A well-planned and fortunate cavalry expedition from this place on Tuesday of this week resulted in the capture of a company of guerrillas belonging to WINTER's battalion. The expedition consisted of three companies of cavalry: Company L, of the First North Carolina, commanded by Capt. GRAHAM; Company G, of the Twelfth New-York, Capt. GRAHAM, and Company D, of the same regiment, commanded by Capt. WEBB, formerly of the Fourteenth New-York (Brooklyn) regiment, and a detachment of the Twenty-third New-York battery—all mounted and armed with pistols only—Capt. GRAHAM, of the North Carolina regiment, commanding the whole party. It started at about sunset, and after a rapid and circuitous march of 34 miles came in sight of the rebel camp—the pickets being captured, without a blow, some six miles this side. The body then formed in two parties; one under command of Capt. WEBB, charging into the camp, the other making a detour and falling upon it in the rear. The enemy were completely surprised, and after a few moments of irregular firing, which resulted in two wounded on our side and four killed on theirs, the entire company surrendered, with the exception of about a half-dozen, who managed to escape. Unfortunately, their Captain was absent, and so not taken prisoner. Our party then returned to camp with a few horses and mules and 56 prisoners. A hundred stand of arms and a quantity of Commissary and Quartermaster's stores, which the cavalry were unable to bring in, were destroyed. The names of our wounded are Corp. JAMES BULLOCK, who has since died, and Private MILES (slightly.) Lieut. WEBB, brother of the rebel Captain, was killed in the attack. Capt. GRAHAM, who commanded, has heretofore earned the reputation of a very dashing cavalry officer—a reputation which this little affair will very well sustain. S.

GOV. VANCE'S MESSAGE.

The North Carolina Legislature assembled at Raleigh, N. C., on the 24th. We make some extracts from GOV. VANCE'S Message:

The very important subject of feeding the poor, whose supporters and protectors are in the army, again demands our attention. The results of the past year's operations are most encouraging, and should serve to give our people confidence in the resources of their State. Great anxiety was felt last Fall, as you know, on the subject of food, and fears were entertained that suffering, if not actual starvation, would be witnessed in many quarters. Under the authority conferred upon me by your body, I purchased and stored away about 30,000 bushels of corn, 200,000 pounds of bacon, a quantity of rice, &c., which I expected would go but little way in supplying the general wants.

When the season closed and the new crop came in, however, to my surprise and gratification, I found that Maj. HOGE, Commissary of Subsistence, had duly issued to the County Commissioners about one-third of the bacon, less than one-half the corn, and but very little of the rice. He reports still on hand some 70,000 pounds of bacon, having fed a number of negroes engaged on the public works, and sold to the army 100,000 pounds, with 20,000 bushels of corn. I have reason to believe that from various causes the crops this year have not been as abundant as usual, and that the public will be called on to do more than last season. But still I see no cause for alarm, and my last year's experience has encouraged me to believe that all can be fed from our own resources by proper prudence and economy. I respectfully recommend a liberal appropriation among the several counties, according to population, for this purpose, at least double that of last year, and that I be allowed to buy and store away corn, flour and bacon as heretofore.

Reports are submitted herewith of the operations of the Ordnance, Subsistence and Quartermaster Departments, which I trust you will find satisfactory. The enterprise of running the blockade and importing army supplies from abroad has proved a complete success. You will see from the report that large quantities of clothing, leather and shoes, lubricating oils, factry findings, sheet-iron and tin, arms and ammunition, medicines, eye-stuffs, blankets, cotton bagging and rope, salaite, coffee, &c., have been safely brought in, besides considerable freight for the Confederacy. Two thousand and ten bales of cotton have been sent to Liverpool, the proceeds of which are deposited to the credit of the State to keep the amount of expenses of the vessel.

With what we have imported and the purchases in our home markets, I think I can safely say that the North Carolina troops will be comfortably clothed to January, 1864—should God, in His Providence, so long see fit to afflict us with a continuance of the war—except as to shoes and blankets. Neither the Ordnance nor Quartermaster's Departments placed too much reliance on foreign importation, but every effort was been made to stimulate home production. Both the quality and quantity of arms and munitions manufactured have been improved in the past twelve months.

We know at least precisely what we would get by emancipation and Morris has our enemy done us good [illegible] the abolition of Slavery, confiscation of property and territorial vassalage.

These are the terms to win us back. Now, when our brothers bleed and mothers and little ones cry for bread, we can point them back to the brick piles of Egypt—thanks to Mr. SEWARD—plainly in view, and show them the beautiful clusters of Eschol which grow in the land of independence, whither we go to possess them. And we can remind them, too, how the pillar of fire and the cloud, the unchanged guardian of Jehovah, went over before the hungering multitude, leading away, with apparent cruelty, from the fatness of servitude. Which made a general feeling among our people will, as heretofore, come firmly up to the full measure of their duty if their trusted servants do not fail them. They will see cruelty attest their own sons, slain in their behalf, or put their gallant chieftains to open shame, by placing power of Will and complete national independence.

FROM THE SEABOARD.

The correspondent of the State Journal, at Kinston, has the following:

KINSTON, Friday, Nov. 27, 1863.

I am sorry to inform you this morning that the reported capture of a portion of Capt. WEBB's company, belonging to Col. WHITSLAW's battalion, turns out to be true.

They were flanked and surprised by the enemy's cavalry, that came out of Washington, and twenty-five to forty were taken captives. The Yankees all made good their escape.

A few shots, I learn, were exchanged by the parties, in which two Yankees were severely wounded, but taken off by them.

I am told that our men attempted to burn their arms by setting on fire a lot of fodder, but failed in their undertaking.

BURNSIDE is certainly in Newbern; he arrived there on Friday last, and was to leave to-day for Washington, N. C. He has paid a visit to Barrington's Ferry, on the north side of the Neuse.

The War in Louisiana and Texas.

From the Atlanta, (Ga.,) Confederacy.

We are indebted to Mr. WARREN ADAMS, a resident of Texas, for some valuable and extremely interesting news from our friends on the west side of the Mississippi.

The following is his account of the battle of the 3d November, between GRANT's brigade and the advance of FRANKLIN's column. The Texan advance, consisting of 2,500 men, was about five miles ahead of the main body, posted in a belt of trees, in the midst of an extensive and level prairie. Gen. GRANT formed his line, placing the infantry in the centre, his cavalry forming the wings. The infantry advanced at a double quick, and the cavalry at gallop; then completely encircling the clump of timber. None of the Yankees stood ten minutes after the advance of our troops. Some were wounded in rear, first escaped. The balance were cut to pieces, or captured. GRANT's command numbered only 1,300 men. The enemy were completely routed, throwing away guns, knapsacks, and all other impediments to their flight. They left 300 dead and wounded on the field. Our loss was 612 in all. They lost their colors and a splendid steel 12-pounder Parrott. The approach of the main body prevented the capture of all their artillery. Their wounded were left by our men upon the field, being correctly considered as an encumbrance. The prisoners number 800 men, of whom are one Colonel, two Lieutenant-Colonels, five Captains. The General in command must have been among the first left behind of the wounded. Gen.

GRANT's brigade is Sharp's old command, composed of Texans and Louisianians, the same that fought the battles of Valverde and Galveston. Disconcerted by this disaster, FRANKLIN's famous column has retreated to New-Orleans, and a Yankee soldier is not to be found between the Atchafalaya and Donaldsonville.

The Louisiana planters are returning to their homesteads, and making preparations to gather in and grind their crops. They do not fear to be molested any more this season.

Gen. KIRBY SMITH, Gen. has of late displayed military qualities of the highest order, and is of the fixed determination to stop trade on the Mississippi. He has planted heavy batteries at different commanding points, and we may soon look for stirring times along the banks of the Father of Waters.

There has never been the like of the crops in Texas this year. The country will not consume half the grain which has been gathered in. Owing to the Federal occupation of Louisiana, the planters of Texas cultivated this year larger fields of sugar-cane. The yield is of larger growth than heretofore, the cane is full of juice, and promises an extraordinary quantity of saccharine. The people look upon this as a Divine interposition in their favor.

Gen. MAGRUDER is active with an energy and the immense resources at his disposal, in strengthening the defences of the Texan coast and frontier. He does his work thoroughly and much to the gratification of the people.

On this side of the river, Mr. ADAMS tells us he was informed by an officer of WIRT ADAMS' cavalry, that Baton Rouge is entirely free from the Yankees. The headquarters of our cavalry pickets are now in that town. Some time since there was a grand fight there between the niggers and the Yankees. The niggers clamored for pay, and, when paid, declared they were not paid as much as their white-skinned brethren. The ill-feeling treated a row; the darkies fired upon the whites, killing about fifty, when the Yankees formed, pitched into the sable crowd, and massacred the greater portion of them. Those who survived were disarmed and ironed. Two days after this "lamentable" occurrence the Federal force at Baton Rouge left, horse, foot and dragoons, for Natchez. There is no doubt of the accuracy of this statement.

Gen. MAGRUDER has sent the colors captured at Sabine Pass to Richmond, in charge of one of the Irish heroes who drove the armada back. This brave fellow, we understand, is a private soldier, who was conspicuous for his conduct in the engagement. This act is characteristic of MAGRUDER, chivalrous and princely character, and reveals why it is his men are so zealous in his service, and so cautious in acts of daring. We are gratified to learn that the fortunate color-bearer is safe on his journey, and will pass through Atlanta in a two or two.

Important Information Concerning Volunteering in New-York.

ALBANY, Friday, Dec. 4.

"Important information respecting volunteer recruiting, in answer to an application through a Commission appointed by Gov. SEYMOUR, composed of Hon. BENJAMIN ENSLOW, Hon. JAMES A. BELL and WILLIAM H. BOGART, Esq., has been received. The War Department has conceded to the following propositions in relation to procuring volunteers under the President's Proclamation, dated Oct. 17, 1863, calling for 300,000 men:

First—That quotas be apportioned to towns and wards in the several Congressional Districts of the State of New-York, and that credit be given to such towns and wards as may furnish their full quota of volunteers under the recent call of the President for 300,000 men that they will be exempt from the pending draft, should one be rendered necessary in January next.

Second—That the several towns and wards shall receive credit for all such volunteers as may have been mustered into the service of the United States since the draft, and the number so credited shall be deducted from their proportion of the quota assigned the State under the recent call.

Third—That the Governor be authorized to raise complete companies of infantry, to be sent to such regiments in the field as have less than their proper number of company organizations. This, however, confers no authority to consolidate regiments.

Meat was stopped a week ago. The rebels have not received letters, but won't let us write comments to the North if they can help it."

AFFAIRS AT CHATTANOOGA.

The Weather Favorable for Military Operations.

A REIGN OF TERROR IN NORTHERN GEORGIA.

GEN. BRAGG RELIEVED BY GEN. HARDEE.

CHATTANOOGA, Friday, Dec. 4.

The weather is mild, and the roads have been drying during the past week. This is most favorable for the rapid march of our relieving column, which is probably within reach of Longstreet to-night.

A number of refugees from Walker County, Ga., came in to-day. They represent that a perfect reign of terror prevails in Northern Georgia. Males of all ages are conscripted, and all supplies are impressed. The citizens are accepting to the enemy.

Gen. BRAGG has been relieved by Gen. HARDEE, who is making desperate efforts to patch up the shattered army and restore the offensive.

The prepossessing sentiment in the portion of Texas occupied by our army is represented to be Union.

THE THIRD AUDITOR.

The Third Auditor of the Treasury, Mr. ANDERSON, who has been confined two weeks by sickness, has resumed his duties. The business thus unavoidably delayed will be at once transacted.

CONCERNING ENLISTING SO MEN NORTH MEN.

The Secretary of War has given his decision to Hon. E. D. FRANCIS, the Second Auditor of the Treasury of the United States, in cases recently submitted by Messrs. JAMES E. DEVEN & Co., of Philadelphia, that the nine months volunteers of several States, who were called out under the first section of the act of July 17, 1862, are not entitled to the sum of $300 bounty and the $2 premium. The amount involved in this question is several millions of dollars, and in various Paymasters throughout the country have paid many of the regiments from Pennsylvania, New-Jersey, Rhode Island and other States, they are peculiarly interested. The several State Military Departments are also involved, as well as some 30,000 troops who have served for nine months. The Second Auditor has also decided that the bounty advanced bounty should be paid by the mustering officer to a recruit where mustered in, as well as the premium. Satisfactory proofs, therefore, must be furnished that the soldier was not paid that bounty, in his sentiment cannot receive the confirmation of the Second Comptroller. It is probable that at an early day in the proceedings of Congress will take action on the whole subject of bounties.

NEWS FROM CHARLESTON HARBOR.

Cessation of the Fire Against Sumter.

The Bombardment of the Other Forts Commenced.

MORE SHELLS THROWN INTO THE CITY.

DUPLICITY OF THE REBELS.

PHILADELPHIA, Friday, Dec. 4.

The United States supply steamer Massachusetts, Lieut. Wm. H. Ward commanding, arrived at the Navy-yard this morning, from Charleston Bar Tuesday afternoon, at 4 o'clock.

She brought back the Marine battalion, consisting 300 men, and several refugees from St. Jones River, Fla., who represented that State to be in a starving condition.

She also brought one of the rebel party who attempted to blow up the Ironsides—Roman Rover by name, formerly of New-York.

Lieut. Ward reports that Gen. GILLMORE still continued to throw shells into Charleston at the rate of twenty per day, and it was evident that they were doing considerable damage. The shells were seen to burst at night.

All the inhabitants of Charleston had been removed to the rear of the city.

The firing on Sumter had ceased, and Gen. GILLMORE was turning his attention to the forts inside the harbor.

A terrible fire was kept up on Fort Johnson.

On the reception of the news of GRANT's victories, on Tuesday, our army and navy fired grand salutes. Soon afterward the rebel batteries opened fire, which was vigorously going on when the Massachusetts left.

The rebels had heretofore kept a hospital flag flying from the Moultrie House, and, of course, our forces respected it and avoided firing upon it. But a few days ago the rebels commenced tearing down the Moultrie House and revealed to our forces a formidable battery, which had been erected behind it while it was under the protection of the hospital flag.

No flag now floats over Sumter, and only an occasional shot is fired from its ruins.

On Thursday last the land batteries engaged the rebel forts on James and Sullivan Islands, for several hours. The firing was very heavy.

The weather, up to the 30th ult. had been stormy, and the navy, in consequence, inactive.

Capt. J. M. HARRISON has been appointed Fleet-Captain, vice BROWN relieved.

REPORTS VIA BOSTON.

BOSTON, Friday, Dec. 4.

The correspondent of the Boston Herald, in a letter dated off Charleston, Nov. 29, says:

"One or two rebel batteries on James Island have been completely demolished by our immense shoal shell. Sumter received so awful pounding yesterday. One of our heavy shot struck upon the inside of the wall, and cast an immense quantity of it into the sea below. The walls are so broken up now that we have a fine view through them.

Last night a Sergeant and ten privates of a Georgia regiment, stationed on James Island, made good their escape during the darkness, and surrendered themselves in our forces on Folly Island. They state that the Charlestonians and the rebel troops are almost in a state of panic. All kinds of estables were scarce and enormously high. They say the South cannot hold out many months longer. The poor people were in a state of starvation in Charleston and Savannah."

State of Feeling in the West.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., Monday, Nov. 30, 1863.

Having just returned from a trip to the West, of nearly one thousand miles, I thought I would give you my experience and a few facts which I collected on my journey. I was some time in Egypt, Illinois, and was there during the election, but from the time I left here until I returned, on the 10th inst., I did not hear one Copperhead open his mouth to advocate his cause, nor did I hear a political argument from the time I left until I returned. Having lived more than thirty-five years in the West, I have traveled much, but in all my experience I never saw so much to encourage the friends of the Union and discourage its enemies, both in the West and in the South, as the result of the last elections, together with the victories of our noble army, whom God bless. Another fact I wish to state, is that I was in Dayton, Ohio, on the 7th inst., the day the farmers brought in supplies of wood, fowl, meat, vegetables, &c., for the families of our brave volunteers; such a sight I never before witnessed—the streets of that city nearly filled—and then to see the spirit of the people—flags on almost every vehicle, and some of them literally covered over with them. All of this done, too, at the home of that arch traitor, VALLANDIGHAM. What a rebuke to that traitor, and all others of his class. While I was in Egypt, a Union man made a suggestion which I think worthy of consideration. He proposed that every county, at its county seat, should erect a monument, and that the names of all those who fell in the present contest for the maintenance of liberty, be inscribed thereon, that generations to come might read of their noble deeds, and be emulated to suffer death as their fathers suffered, to maintain that liberty which is now their heritage. Another fact that is worthy of notice is, that the colored people of this city, (Alexandria,) of whom we have nearly six thousand, the greater portion of whom were formerly slaves, are conducting themselves well, proving they appreciate their liberation from Slavery. They have put up several hundred small buildings at their own expense, out of their earnings, and are establishing with some little assistance, churches and schools for their children. Drunkenness is almost unknown among them, and their good conduct is disarming almost the prejudice of every one. "This is God's work, and it is marvelous in our eyes."

High-Handed Action of the Coal Dealers.

PHILADELPHIA, Friday, Dec. 4.

The Bulletin publishes the following:

"We learn this afternoon, from an agent of a steamship company, that he has been endeavoring to-day to purchase 1,000 tons of coal, and that far unsuccessfully. We has received information that a meeting of coal operators was held last Saturday, at which it was resolved, in order to keep up the present high prices, to suspend mining operations. The suspension was to commence immediately; but it was finally determined that it should not commence until the 15th of December."

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE

Recruiting in this City.

Recruiting in this City under the new call for volunteers is getting to be quite brisk, the number enlisting being daily on the increase. The war meeting held at the Cooper Institute will doubtless give an impetus to the business, the effects of which will be felt during the coming week. The City bounty of $300 was stopped on Wednesday, the funds having run out, but Mr. BLUNT replenished the coffers so as to be able to resume payment on Thursday. The Assistant Provost-Marshal Gen. HAYES yesterday read a dispatch from the War Department, saying that authority for the regular army in this City should be credited to the quota of New-York, and that the usual premium of $15 and $20 would be paid to those furnishing recruits for the regular army as well as for the volunteer regiments. There is a difficulty, however, about recruits for the regular army getting the City bounty of $300. Mr. BLUNT declines paying the bounty except upon the certificate of one of the Provost-Marshals that the man was duly enlisted, while Gen. HAYES has issued an order to the Provost-Marshals not to enlist soldiers for the regular army. This order was necessary to prevent confusion in the discharge of the duties properly belonging to the Provost-Marshals, but some arrangement will be made by which soldiers enlisting for the regular service can receive the City bounty. The Government has consented in the enlistment of soldiers for the new regiments now in process of formation in this City, although the call for volunteers was to fill up old regiments in the field. There are three new artillery and four new cavalry regiments now recruiting in the City, but no more new regiments will be authorized.

The Metropolitan Cavalry Regiment.

The enthusiastic meeting which took place Thursday evening at Cooper Institute has already induced several of our most influential citizens to promise volunteering. The Metropolitan cavalry regiment, which is to be under the command of Col. JOHN B. HAGGIN, will receive an appropriation of the "extra bounty," and there is no doubt that it will be filled up in a very short time. The Committee of Organization, among whom we notice prominent gentlemen of every political party, including the Mayor elect, E. Comptroller Gideonse, are appointing committees in each Ward to receive subscriptions to the "Extra Bounty Fund." Comptroller CHECKERS, who was yesterday appointed as collector in the First Ward, by the following letter, Mr. Wm. H. FIELD, of the Comptroller's office, is Treasurer. He is a gentleman of most character, and his name is a sufficient guarantee that the funds subscribed will be properly appropriated.

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, Dec. 4, 1863.

CHAS. E. CHECKERS, Esq., 1 Wall-st:

DEAR SIR: I have the pleasure to inform you that you are appointed Collector in the First Ward, for all subscriptions to the "Extra Bounty Fund," which is to be appropriated to the raising of a Metropolitan Cavalry Regiment," under the command of Col. JOHN B. HAGGIN.

You will address to me a weekly return of the subscriptions, which will be published in the newspapers. I hope you will succeed in your patriotic endeavors, as all our fellow countrymen understand now the urgent necessity to fill up our quota before a month. Yours, very respectfully,

WM. H. FIELD, Treasurer.

Board of City Canvassers.

The Aldermen as City Canvassers met at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and continued their labors. The returns from the Eighteenth Ward were canvassed complete, Alderman ORTIGEN reading off the figures. For Mayor, the vote is as follows: GUNNISS, 2,181; TIEMAN, 1,754; BOOLE, 723; GUNNISS over TIEMAN, 427; all else over BOOLE, 1,458. Parts of the Seventh, Sixth and Thirteenth Wards were canvassed, and the Board adjourned to 10 o'clock this morning. The only question of doubt to be settled by the official canvass is the vote for Councilmen in the Sixth Senatorial District, where two Republicans, Messrs. JAQUES and OWEN, are undoubtedly elected, and another, Mr. VINCENT, is believed to be beating his Republican Democratic and present incumbent, by a very small majority.

The Homicide at the Fewter Mug—The Prisoner Nixon—The Murdered Jefferds.

JOHN H. NIXON, the one-legged soldier who shot Wm. N. Rhews, proprietor of the Fewter Mug, a few weeks since, will have his trial at the present term of the Court of Sessions, which commences on Monday next. B. L. CLINTON, Esq., will act as his counsel. Since the homicide NIXON has been confined in the Tombs, where his deportment has been such as to secure the respect of the keepers and all with whom he has come in contact. He expresses great regret for the fatal result of the affray, which he says was unintentional, he having no design to kill Mr. RHEWS, who was an entire stranger to him, but merely to protect himself against a renewal of what he said was an utterly unprovoked assault.

Among other prisoners at the Tombs who will probably be tried at the present term, are five or six of the Poly rioters, who are charged with murder in connection with the outrages perpetrated upon the colored people.

CHARLES M. JEFFERDS, the hero of the Walton and Mathews murders, still remains at the Tombs, which has so long been his restroom that it would seem to be a not unpleasant change for him to be taken out, if it were only to be hanged. His case still hangs fire in the Court of Appeals, where it is doubtful to remain until the prisoner dies a natural death. The Court have ordered a new argument on the motion for a new trial, the argument made in October having been either misunderstood, unappreciated or forgotten.

Riot at South Amboy.

South Amboy has had some excitement during the week. The laboring employees of the Camden and Amboy Railroad struck, marched through the streets with clubs, &c., and beat all who would not join them. They made brutes of themselves and are dissatisfied to any concessions by the Company. There are men enough to do but at the advertised prices the Company offers, and it is to be hoped that not one of the drunken, ruffianly ragabonds, who made a business of it, to remain responsible and law-abiding citizens, will be again employed. The officers of the road should see to it that these fellows have no more work. They, for a time, were entire masters of the situation, there being no "locusts" at South Amboy to deter or punish them. They stopped all business on the road, delayed the mails, beat peaceable men, and were supreme until Sheriff CAMPBELL of New-Brunswick arrived with a small force, when the ringleaders were arrested, some arrested, and the balance dispersed. The mob was composed of the vilest and most cowardly material imaginable, drawn together without common cause, until they were emboldened by the Know-nothing party, until they were drunk, and even yet will and insolent at the mere mention of one hundred. Thieves encouraged, fellows of disreputable character were at the bottom of this movement. The Company owe it to the public to see that not one man engaged in the outrage has a day's work on the road again. Employees of higher grades have temporarily undertaken to discharge the interrupted duties, and they are well armed themselves and are protected by a militia company from Trenton.

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the managers was held at the Bible House, Astor-place, on Thursday, the 3d inst., at half past 3 P. M., Wm. B. Ogden, Esq., in the Chair, assisted by Jesse Lippincott, Francis Hall and Thomas Pearne, Secs.

Rev. Dr. Spence read the eleventh chapter of Isaiah and offered prayer.

Four new members were nominated, of which two were in Kansas, one in Missouri, and one in Ohio.

Communications were received from E. B. Bruce, Esq., Secretary of Virginia Bible Society, by which the Society stand in pressed necessities in the circulation of the Scriptures in Virginia; from Rev. Levi Theim, of North Carolina, asking for 100 volumes for the North Carolina troops in the Confederate Army, the application being recommended by Gen. Vance and other gentlemen of high character; from E. H. Pennell, Rev. President of the Mountain and Shelby County Bible Societies, asking books to supply Rev. Daniel Lindsay, from Rev. Amasa Jones, Missionary, Tyre, in regard to the distribution of the Scriptures in New-Mexico; from Rev. E. Nelson, Chile, stating some improvement in circulating the Scriptures in Brazil; from Rev. Messrs. Stone and M. W. Stark, Sr., of Montevideo, with encouraging statements from Mendoza, Rev. J. E. Stone, Concepcion, with a pleasing extract of Bible distribution on the Miles; from Rev. R. S. Stone, Pernambuco, on a Bible work in Italy; from Rev. Jacob Santee, Constantinople, Bible, two letters giving details of the Bible work in Turkey; from Rev. Edward Riggs, Athens, Greece, with a pleasing Sabbath Testament, and stating encouragement in spiritual work, on account of the Scriptures from Rev. J. Thomson, Beirut, Syria, with a pleasing extract from the journal of the colporteur; from Rev. Messrs. Hepburn and Lanneau, Canton, China, with a pleasing extract from Rev. E. Lazarus, Canton, showing the Bible work in that region, and calling for a colporteur in behalf of the Bible Society; also conversation of the missionaries, which was very interesting. Grants of books were made to the Freedmen's Association, for Newbern, N. C.; to the American Seamen's Friend Society, Russian Testaments in Hebrew, for Russian Jews; books in Spanish, for Acapulco, Mexico; eight volumes for the Blind, with numerous smaller grants; 100,000 volumes were granted for troops and hospitals in North Carolina, and 50,000 for supply of the Confederate army and others in the Southwest, and 100 Bibles for rebel prisoners at Point of Rocks, Maryland.

The entire number of volumes granted at this meeting was over 107,000.

A new society was organized in Western Kentucky and will call for Bibles.

Societies.

POLYTECHNIC ASSOCIATION OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE.

The regular weekly meeting of the Association was held on Thursday evening, Prof. THEIMAN in the Chair, and Prof. GARVEY, Secretary.

During the conversazione on miscellaneous subjects, a steam valve and cut-off was exhibited and examined, as was also a new fire-fly, the invention of a Connecticut gentleman. He claimed that it would outstrip all hitherto fly-fire, and that it could be fired with great rapidity, and with perfect precision. The Association decided to think that it had sufficient merit to examine into it, and it was accordingly, with the cut-off, referred to a Committee.

An improved electro-magnetic machine was also exhibited, and called forth a brief but interesting discussion.

A paper was read upon our "Iron-clad Navy," which was referred on file.

The regular subject for discussion—"Tunnel-lines Least Pipe"—being called, Mr. SHAW, of the firm of WILLARD C. SHAW, of this City, read a highly interesting paper, giving the testimony of several uniform chemists as to the deterioration of lead in pipes for conveying water, and as to impurities for the use of man. He also gave an interesting account of the improved manufacture, and exhibited specimens of the tunnel-lined pipe, which were uniformly covered on the inside with a tin pipe. The Association expressed their unanimous opinion that the use of the ordinary lead pipe was positively dangerous to health. Mr. SHAW, who subsequently added a description of the chemical effects of the lead by several eminent chemists present, and who fully agreed with him, but desired to know the operation of making the improved tunnel pipe, stated how it was made. Mr. SHAW explained, by the aid of large drawings, the modus operandi. He said the lead was formed into a hollow cylinder, having a space for the tin. By causing the lead around a large steel core and when the lead became partially cool the core was removed and a smaller core substituted of the diameter of the bore of the pipe. The tin was then drawn through the space between the core and the cylinder of lead, was filled with pure block tin, and after resting a few moments, by the application of hydraulic pressure, the tin and lead were forced through a die upon the core, and as the lead always presses from the circumference to the centre, it always produces the pipe uniformly coated. In answer to inquiries he said that the tin could be put on to any desired thickness, but that they had found ten per cent. of tin to be sufficient to form a protecting coat to the lead, and at the same time give the pipe additional strength. In regard to price he said that it could be furnished at the same price per running foot as the lead. At the conclusion of the paper the question of the use of the tin lining was discussed, how it was applied, which is impossible to be added to the lead pipe, and still be furnished at the price of the lead. Mr. SHAW said that tin is just five times the strength of lead, and that where the "tinning" was formed between the tin and lead, it produced an alloy that was even stronger, and at times, seems, they were enabled to make the pipe enough lighter or thinner by using this process, so that it brought the price per foot of each pipe precisely the same.

Profs. EVANS, THIEMAN, GARVEY, Drs. RICHARDSON, PARKINSON, and several other scientific men expressed the opinion that it was a perfect method of effecting the object desired. Prof. GARVEY gave an amusing and interesting statement of his experiments in introducing new metals to commerce, and how some of them had met with no great little attention in anything, outside of a daily routine duty, and these were, many ignorant men in all trades, but the ignorant don't not to be uncommon, who always thought improvements brought additional labor. But in this particular case the labor, in a certain extent, is reduced, and any man having sufficient knowledge to make a joint case with certainty, make it with the improved tunnel pipe, and he was of opinion that its introduction would be exceedingly rapid. On motion, the "Chemistry of Lead Pipe" was referred to three of our eminent chemists to report upon next Thursday evening, when the same subject is to be continued, in connection with the "Bursting of Glass," which seemed elicited so well to be of peculiar interest.

The Polytechnic Institution is the only scientific society in this City. It is open to the public free, and many of our most learned and other citizens attend regularly, and participate in the various discussions. All inventors having improvements to show, and wishing to subject them to the test of unbiased, but severe criticism, will find an opportunity here.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

COUNTY VOLUNTEER COMMITTEE.—A glaring attempt to defraud a recruit out of $370 was laid before Mr. BLUNT, the Chairman of this Committee, yesterday. Complaint was made by the wife of an enlisted man that the broker who had induced her husband to enlist and give him only $20, after positively promising to give him the full County bounty of $300. The broker, named a MALLOY, appeared and attempted to justify his conduct, but under the searching inquiries put by Mr. BLUNT he prevaricated and finally stultified himself. Mr. BLUNT quickly gave him the alternative of paying the balance of $270, due to the wife of the cheated recruit, or of not being allowed to transact business any further with the Committee. This latter condition involved the possibility of a suit against the broker by the wife of his victim. The broker speedily made up his mind to refund the money he had wrongfully withheld, and with considerable perturbation paid it over to the complainant. Mr. BLUNT is fully determined that no recruit shall be wronged of a cent, if he can help it.

WOMAN'S INFIRMARY ASSOCIATION.—This is the title of a new charitable society just organized in this City, the objects of which, as stated in the act of incorporation, are "to establish and carry on an Infirmary or Hospital for Women to treat them for, and aim to cure, all diseases peculiar to women." The Association was incorporated in October last, and a Committee has been appointed, with Dr. J. W. Mandeville as chairman, to procure subscriptions for the permanent establishment and maintenance of the institution. Among the Directors of the Institution are Ex-Judge EMMONS, Esq., F. PINCKNEY, CHARLES F. PINCKNEY, D. D. SMITH, GODFREY W. LEAKE, and others. It is proposed to locate the building on Washington Heights, north of the Central Park. The institution is to be under the control of the Homeopathists, and the treatment will be in accordance with that school of practice. There is plenty of room for a benevolent institution of this kind, and the officers of HAHNEMANN are sufficiently numerous in this community to warrant the enterprise.

AN OLD DODGE REVIVED.—On Wednesday evening last, about half-past six o'clock, an adroit theft was committed at No. 6 East Twenty-eighth-street, by means of the old dodge of a "letter." While the family of Mr. H. H. RIES were down stairs at dinner, the bell rang, and upon the servant opening the door, a young man presented himself with a note addressed to this gentleman's wife, saying that he desired an answer. The servant not comprehending anything wrong, took the note to her mistress, leaving the door wide open. The lady of the house read the note, which purported to be from her husband, and directed her to give the bearer the sum of $20. The lady hastened down stairs, but the bearer had left the house, taking with him an overcoat and a cane which were hanging on the hat stand. It being dark at the time, no trace of him could be discovered. The letter, on opening it, contained nothing but a blank sheet of note paper.

TRAVELERS AT CASTLE GARDEN.—Although the record of the Resident Physician at Castle Garden has not yet been made, still the aggregate of the arrival of emigrants from Jan. 1 to the 26th of November, has, we have been ascertained, to be over 150,000—an increase of more than two-thirds over the same period last year. In the month of November, 12,521 emigrants were registered at Castle Garden—an excess of more than 2,000 over the arrivals of any previous month of the year. The duties of the officials at Castle Garden are necessarily very onerous, many of them working sixteen hours a day. Officer KRAUSE and Assistant BIRNS, who are always found at their posts, have worked nearly on their vigilance and attention to duty, and are valuable officials.

NEW-YORK BEARING CLUB.—The Club-house of this organization has just been erected, and is ready for the reception of the Club and the Conservatory Fund, the money of the above at Union, which the Commissioners have set apart for the use of this association. The Club are indebted to Mr. GEO. WEBB, who, and the following gentlemen, by the appointment of the Commissioners, and the contract with the Commissioners, have appropriated $1,000 for the expenses of the coming season. As soon as His Majesty Jack Frost condescends the ice to a sufficient thickness to allow skating on all the Park ponds, the New-York Club will be ready to receive their friends.

THIRTEENTH WARD.—The thirty-second annual ball of the Thistle Benevolent Association takes place at the City Assembly Rooms on the evening of Thursday, the 10th. The proceeds of the Association are for relief of the widows and orphans, irrespective of country or creed, but only certainly extending that necessary to prove them respectable and deserving, and the ball should be made a success, as the funds go to the Benevolent Association Department. The tickets are One Dollar.

TO ANITA GARIBALDI.—The Society "D'Unione E Fratellanza, Italiana," of this City, have received so much an earnest effort to raise the necessary means for erecting a monument which, both by its gigantic dimensions and the excellence of its execution, will be a worthy tribute to the memory of the noble woman and heroine. In Italy, as in New-York, the proposition has met with great favor, and here an organized plan for securing contributions has been perfected. The Italians of the City make their appeal to those of all countries to unite with them.

PRACTICAL THANKSGIVING.—At the monthly meeting of the U. S. Christian Commission, held at their rooms on the 30th ult., the Treasurer, JAS. M. BROWN, Esq., stated that Thanksgiving collections had already been received from thirty-two churches, amounting in the aggregate to about $4,000. This amount has since been swelled to $6,500, received by the New-York branch Store, whose field of supply is limited to the States of New-York, Connecticut and the eastern half of New-Jersey.

THE STARVING SOLDIERS AT RICHMOND.—The Sanitary Commission propose a course of four popular lectures to be delivered at Cooper Institute, the first next Wednesday evening, and two each week, the proceeds to be applied to the relief of our starving soldiers at Richmond. Such a purpose appeals at once to the heart, and will elicit, undoubtedly, a most liberal response.

DROWNED.—A peddler named BERNARD FINNEGAN was drowned, yesterday afternoon, at Pier No. 7, North River. Deceased was intoxicated at the time he fell into the water. Every effort was made by several bystanders to rescue the drowning man, but to no purpose.

THE DUNDERBERG.—This famous ram, which is being built at W. H. WEBB's ship-yard, at the foot of Sixth-street, East River, is rapidly approaching completion. The iron plates intended for the armor of the vessel have been delivered, and will soon be riveted on the ship's sides.

REQUEST FOR A NEW HOSPITAL.—Mr. JAMES H. ROOSEVELT, who died in this City last week, has devised his entire estate, nearly half a million of dollars, "for the establishment in the City of New-York of an hospital for the reception and relief of sick and diseased persons, and for its permanent endowment."

SALE OF PAINTINGS.—A number of paintings, from the studio of W. G. BOARDMAN, are now exhibiting at the Derby Gallery, No. 629 Broadway. They will be sold at auction, and are a collection from which a valuable selection could be made.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

ROBBERIES.—A large number of robberies have of late been perpetrated in East Brooklyn, and considerable property stolen from houses temporarily unoccupied. It is known that these thefts are perpetrated by young men and boys, a number of whom have frequently been arrested by the Fifth-fourth Precinct Police, but in consequence of the youth of some of them, the Justices discharged them with a reprimand. They seem to appear let loose than more robberies are committed. They are again arrested, and the same farce is repeated by the Justices. At such time we look than prevention of these robberies were arrested by Officers Greene and Case, after a search of three weeks. It was proven that they had robbed at least 8 dwelling houses, but, after a few weeks' detention in jail, they were discharged. They are now again at work as lively as ever.

MAN FOUND DROWNED.—The body of a man was found at the foot of Sun Squit-street yesterday. He was about five feet in height, aged 30, apparently. Had brown hair, no whiskers, wore a black frock coat, black vest and pantaloons, low shoes, blue flannel shirt, light drawers, short over-shirt, three pearl buttons in front, silk cravat; a carpenter's rule in the pocket, three car tickets, knife, comb, and short corn cobs; also a briar-wood pipe. Deceased had been in the water 10 or 12 days. Coroner NUGENT took charge of the body, and had it conveyed to the Dead-house for identification.

THE SICK AND WOUNDED SOLDIERS.—A meeting of ladies of Brooklyn was held at the Packer Institute yesterday morning, called by the Women's Relief Association of this city, for the purpose of inaugurating measures for the holding of a Fair in Brooklyn, in conjunction with the great Metropolitan Fair, for the benefit of sick and wounded soldiers. Addresses were made by Mr. JANEWAY and Rev. Dr. SPRAG, and resolutions were adopted to appoint Committees from each Church, with instructions to aid in carrying out the objects contemplated.

RECRUITING IN BROOKLYN.—Recruiting was more brisk yesterday than any day previous since Gen. SICKLES's headquarters were opened. Twenty-four men were enlisted up to 2 o'clock, and after that hour eight more were secured. The first lot among whom were eight colored men—were sent to Riker's Island. The others will be detained until this afternoon. The highest day's business heretofore was 23 recruits.

THE STREET LAMPS.—A large number of the street lamps are broken and never lighted, whether the moon shines or not. Two lamps were lighted in Washington Park on Tuesday night, whereas about thirty should shine forth. The lamps are in a disordered state all about the city. The streets are the same.

COUNTERFEITS.—Counterfeit drafts on the Union Bank of Troy, N. Y., were in circulation yesterday, in Brooklyn.

Williamsburgh.

FATAL ACCIDENT—TWO MEN FATALLY INJURED.—Yesterday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, the cellar of CRAMPELLIN & Co., corner of Washington and Adams streets, caved in, burying two men beneath it. It was intended for the cellar of a brewery, and was 22 feet in depth. Strange to say, no side support had been afforded. The contracting mason, Mr. WM. ROYES, residing at the corner of Graham-avenue and Meserole-street, was buried, and when taken out from the ruins life was found to be extinct. He leaves a wife and children. Mr. ROYES had been at work only half an hour at the time of the accident. GEO. WIBERT, a laborer, was so severely injured about the head and breast that it was thought last night he would die. He is 48 years of age, and resides at No. 102 Montrose-avenue. Coroner BERGER will hold an inquest on the body of ROYES this morning.

TAKING A "BOUNTY-JUMPER."—Officers DALY and CORNIS, of the Second Congressional District Force, have arrested a notorious "bounty-jumper," named CORNELIUS VERSLUYS, of Canarsie, L. I., who had realized some $1,000 by enlisting thirteen different regiments. He began in the Sixteenth Heavy Artillery, at Albany—got into Spinola's Brigade—served the North Carolina, and finally, into the Marine corps of the Navy-yard. He owned the charges against him, when secured, and was taken to Governor's Island. The same officers are now on the track of others.

EXEMPTIONS.—Persons entitled to exemption in the Second Congressional District, Brooklyn, from attendance, non-residence, unfamiliar age, or physical disability, can now present themselves at No. 20 Grand-street, Williamsburgh. Their cases will there be heard, and exemption certificates immediately granted to those entitled to them.

The Case of Commissioner Lansing.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your issue of Saturday there appears a card bearing the signature of Commissioner LANSING, embodying charges which he states that he has preferred against Capt. J. W. FARR. One of them is as follows:

CHARGE 3—Receiving, entertaining and employing a deserter, in violation of the Article of War.—Specification—That Capt. JAMES W. FARR, Provost-Marshal of the Sixth (6th) Congressional District of the State of New-York, did knowingly receive, entertain and employ Private RUDOLPH ANDERSON, a deserter from the Eighty-third (83d) New-York Volunteers, as a special officer in his office, and continue to employ him at the time to be indicated, and, subsequently, the said Private ANDERSON, Eighty-third regiment New-York Volunteers, having been arrested as a deserter and confined in the Park Barracks in New-York City; that Capt. JAMES W. FARR did manage to obtain Private RUDOLPH ANDERSON's release from thence, and had the barrel over to his quarters; and that Capt. JAMES W. FARR did again employ Private RUDOLPH ANDERSON as a special officer in his office, and continue to employ him, in strict violation of the Twenty-second Article of War.

All this in the City of New-York, on or about the 3d day of August, 1863.

Will you allow me to say in reply, that he was not being a deserter, I was regularly discharged from the Eighty-third regiment New-York State Volunteers, by Maj.-Gen. SANDFORD, on June 14, 1861, for physical disability, as the papers now in my possession show.

REUBEN T. ANDERSON,
Special Officer Sixth District.

NEW BOOKS.

Lady Dunboyne is comparatively, with many other titled novelists, unknown to the American public. The great Irish Whig family to which she belongs, ramifies so widely that it is impossible, even by the aid of the tell-tale Peerages, to ascertain her individuality among a crowd of namesakes. Whether a young authoress or not, she writes with facility and assured ease, and Mary Lyndsay may be recommended as a good average story of domestic life among the upper middle classes of English society. The interest of the plot turns upon the evils of enforced marriage from mercenary considerations, in obedience to parental will, and the impossibility of redeeming a false step of this nature, by which the fair promise of a life is blighted, until the soothing influences of time and the active exercise of the kindly affections lead through sorrow to peace and thankfulness. The characters are well discriminated, and the dialogues sprightly with feminine shrewdness.

THE GREAT STONE BOOK OF NATURE. By DAVID THOMAS ANSTED, M. A., &c., Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge. 12mo. Philadelphia: George W. Childs.

Foremost among living geologists is the distinguished author of this book. Selected to fill the chair of geology in King's College, London, as successor to Prof. PHILLIPS, he is known by his successful teaching, his numerous published works on the science, and his extensive personal researches in most portions of the globe, undertaken for the development of their mineral riches. When men of this class write elementary books we receive them with a confidence proportioned to their established renown, and Mr. CHILDS has undoubtedly done good service to the cause of science by introducing Prof. ANSTED's work to a wider circle of readers through the medium of his very handsome reprint, superior as it is in getting up to the original edition. Novelty of treatment distinguishes it from other introductory treatises on geology. It starts with the idea that the familiar phrase, "The Book of Nature," understates the truth; that nature is in reality an immense Library, for tireless study, composed of many books, of which every department of knowledge, large or small, is a separate volume. Foremost among them is "the book that teaches us the structure and composition of the earth we live in; the history of its gradual progress, and the inhabitants it has had from time to time; in a word, THE STONE BOOK—the leaves are the various and successive layers of earth and rock that make up the whole solid mass, laid bare occasionally in the cliff and the quarry, but generally concealed beneath the soil and trodden negligently under foot; its pictures are the picturesque remains of its former inhabitants now long passed away. The Stone Book is the science of geology." This passage will serve as a key to the author's method. Carrying out this metaphor and illustrating it with abundant learning, he traverses with the student the whole field of geological survey, explaining for his instruction the character of the great book—hieroglyphics, indeed, to the uninitiated, but pregnant with light and meaning when interpreted by science. A bare enumeration of the topics discussed would more than fill one of our columns. Next to the writings of HUGH MILLER, perhaps, no work has appeared so well adapted to excite an interest in the wonders that lie around us, and it has the advantage over them of being a systematic work, where every subject occupies its proper place in subordination to the whole. The illustrations are finely executed, and we predict a warm reception for the Great Stone Book.

THE THOUGHTS OF THE EMPEROR, M. AURELIUS ANTONINUS. Translated by George Long. 12mo. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

Prof. Long has done good service by his revival of one of the choicest monuments of antiquity. Its fame has been unfortunate. Preserved to us in a single manuscript, without title, and its history quite unknown, internal evidence has always stamped its genuineness, and at the revival of letters in this poetic and beautifully executed volume, is yet too little removed from us by time, and still too closely connected with the rude and angry passions of political partizanship, to be susceptible of purely literary, or indeed of scientific, historical treatment. All we can do it is to bear witness to the zeal, industry and intelligence displayed by Mr. FARRAR in the fulfilment of his task. Based on the most authentic documentary sources, and fortified at every step by copies of the original papers supplied to him by the great actors in the scene, the author has enjoyed for this book the advantage of unreserved personal intercourse with Gen. BUTLER and his military staff. All practicable sources of information were thrown open to him, with the sole stipulation that a faithful, honest, and not an apologetic use should be made of them, and it will therefore surprise no one acquainted with Mr. FARRAR's previous writings, to be told that he has produced a work perfectly exhaustive of the subject in hand. He commences with the youth of his hero, Gen. BUTLER, whose professional career is briefly and pleasantly sketched, until the day when the sword and the camp superseded the pen and the court-house. The military narrative then begins, and details with minuteness the events of Gen. BUTLER's career, from his leaving Boston at the head of the Massachusetts regiments, until the successful attack on the Mississippi forts placed New-Orleans at his command and afforded an opportunity for the display of administrative talent more momentous than the world has often seen. How the exigency was fully met, and how quickly it was proved that "the right man was in the right place," the world knows, every page of the book tells, with a particularity that rarely trespasses on good taste, through a constant stream of laudation. The author has been anxious to preserve as much as possible, the writings of Gen. BUTLER, who is placed by him in a classification that will not meet with universal consent as chief among "the three great writers of the war, Gen. BUTLER, President LINCOLN, and Mr. WILKIE, of the Spirit of the Times!" They are fine specimens of nervous English, hitting at once the point aimed at, and entirely free from the prettiny often attributed to legal papers and writers. As materials for the future Macaulay or Bancroft who shall, about A. D. 1964, produce the classic "History of the Great Rebellion," Mr. FARRAR's book will be invaluable, his natural bias as a hero-worshiper being allowed for, and far more than counterbalanced by indefatigable and labors for the discovery of historical truth. The book is illustrated by a fine steel portrait of Gen. BUTLER, and military maps and plans. Its general effect is creditable to both author and publisher.

MARY LYNDSAY, A Novel. By the Lady Emily FREMANTLE, author of "The Discipline of Life," "Rockbury," and her Sister." New-York: Harper & Brothers.

Lady Fremantle is comparatively, with many other titled novelists, unknown to the American public. The great Irish Whig family to which she belongs, ramifies so widely that it is impossible, even by the aid of the tell-tale Peerages, to ascertain her individuality among a crowd of namesakes. Whether a young authoress or not, she writes with facility and assured ease, and Mary Lyndsay may be recommended as a good average story of domestic life among the upper middle classes of English society. The interest of the plot turns upon the evils of enforced marriage from mercenary considerations, in obedience to parental will, and the impossibility of redeeming a false step of this nature, by which the fair promise of a life is blighted, until the soothing influences of time and the active exercise of the kindly affections lead through sorrow to peace and thankfulness. The characters are well discriminated, and the dialogues sprightly with feminine shrewdness.

THE GREAT STONE BOOK OF NATURE. By DAVID THOMAS ANSTED, M. A., &c., Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge. 12mo. Philadelphia: George W. Childs.

Foremost among living geologists is the distinguished author of this book. Selected to fill the chair of geology in King's College, London, as successor to Prof. PHILLIPS, he is known by his successful teaching, his numerous published works on the science, and his extensive personal researches in most portions of the globe, undertaken for the development of their mineral riches. When men of this class write elementary books we receive them with a confidence proportioned to their established renown, and Mr. CHILDS has undoubtedly done good service to the cause of science by introducing Prof. ANSTED's work to a wider circle of readers through the medium of his very handsome reprint, superior as it is in getting up to the original edition. Novelty of treatment distinguishes it from other introductory treatises on geology. It starts with the idea that the familiar phrase, "The Book of Nature," understates the truth; that nature is in reality an immense Library, for tireless study, composed of many books, of which every department of knowledge, large or small, is a separate volume. Foremost among them is "the book that teaches us the structure and composition of the earth we live in; the history of its gradual progress, and the inhabitants it has had from time to time; in a word, THE STONE BOOK—the leaves are the various and successive layers of earth and rock that make up the whole solid mass, laid bare occasionally in the cliff and the quarry, but generally concealed beneath the soil and trodden negligently under foot; its pictures are the picturesque remains of its former inhabitants now long passed away. The Stone Book is the science of geology." This passage will serve as a key to the author's method. Carrying out this metaphor and illustrating it with abundant learning, he traverses with the student the whole field of geological survey, explaining for his instruction the character of the great book—hieroglyphics, indeed, to the uninitiated, but pregnant with light and meaning when interpreted by science. A bare enumeration of the topics discussed would more than fill one of our columns. Next to the writings of HUGH MILLER, perhaps, no work has appeared so well adapted to excite an interest in the wonders that lie around us, and it has the advantage over them of being a systematic work, where every subject occupies its proper place in subordination to the whole. The illustrations are finely executed, and we predict a warm reception for the Great Stone Book.

THE THOUGHTS OF THE EMPEROR, M. AURELIUS ANTONINUS. Translated by George Long. 12mo. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

Prof. Long has done good service by his revival of one of the choicest monuments of antiquity. Its fame has been unfortunate. Preserved to us in a single manuscript, without title, and its history quite unknown, internal evidence has always stamped its genuineness, and at the revival of

Mr. Bierstadt's gallery, Broadway, will be found a magnificent Oregon image, which claims attention on its merits from the prodigious manner in which its merits are set forth in an accompanying pamphlet, as from its intrinsic excellence. It is a landscape painted on a canvas some twelve feet long. It is called the "Sign of Promise." This title, we suppose, refers especially to a brilliantly painted rainbow, which spans a dark mass of retiring rain-clouds. The pamphlet, which seems intended to forestall the observer's inspection, says: "That the public taste in art has been led to desire what is called the real in landscape—that is to say, the local and particular, and not the universal and ideal." Mr. BIERSTADT, on the contrary, holds an opinion that only the elements of the truly picturesque exist externally in material scenes, and that the highest beauty and truest value of the landscape painting are in the sentiment and feeling which flow from the mind and heart of the artist." He regards the rainbow as the visible expression of a strongly felt emotion of Hope and Promise. "If the picture presents not more than one sees on the canvas, it is a failure, at least to him. It is intended also to embody certain combinations of scenery on the Delaware River. Outwardly, it is a beautiful composition of mingled stream, meadow, field, village and forest, with its rich associations of harvest and human labor; overcast by storm through which gleams the rainbow of hope; inwardly, an eloquent symbol of struggling soul."

Such is the character claimed for the picture by the artist. We must confess that, to us, in the high-sounding sense (or nonsense) assumed by the writer, it is a failure. We fail to discover in it any particular inward sense. The mere expedient of ignoring the "local and particular," substituting for lovely detail vague and slovenly generalities, does not endow it with interior or spiritual characteristics. It would seem that the artist deems that the inward sense resides in the middle distance, since that is vague, while the far distance is more defined, and the foreground richly particularized. The picture, moreover, as a whole, fails to give the cheerful, happy idea of promise. It is altogether too gloomy and sombre for that. Such scenes in nature are characterized by a peculiarly vivid effect of light and shade. The sun bursts forth with unwonted splendor, and the dark and sullen clouds fun away in appalling contrast. This picture affords no light of promise. There is, besides, as much effort in parts to reproduce the local and particular as is found in paintings generally. Divested of the pretensions of the accompanying pamphlet, the picture is a splendid production, painted with an ability that unquestionably places Mr. BIERSTADT in the first rank of American landscape artists. As an attempt to reproduce the sublime phenomenon of a passing thundergust, it is a great success, notwithstanding some objectionable features. The water of contrast which follows a recent shower, is a subtle difficulty which has been very successfully rendered by Mr. BIERSTADT.

"A Summer's Memory of Berkshire," by JAS. HAIR, of Scotia, is arresting a great deal of deserved attention. A lake, half blinded by flower, wriggling into many gilded fields of husbandry, gently lifting to mountain cliffs, and revealing far away in the woody distance the blue smoke and the white spire of the valley village, are the simple elements from which the artist, with a poet's fancy, has constructed a most lovely picture. A brook, which, winding through the valley, suddenly widens out in the foreground, rippling over the stony shallows, foaming over the dam, reflecting a magnificent tower, or an overhanging vine, or a drinking cow, is painted with regard to all the wealth of incident, which the poet's eye detects in such a scene. The variety of incident, and color and form which the artist has bestowed upon the little stream, shows that he has studied nature profoundly. He has elaborated his brook with loving fastidiousness. The aerial perspective is strikingly good. The picture is also invested with a rare sense of delicate color, and gradation of light. It is well named a "Summer's Memory."

In the same gallery hangs a large picture which groups together, in characteristic attitudes, a number of American inventors, including easily recognized portraits of Samuel Morse, Dr. Mauran, the discoverer of pain-killing ether, Samuel Colt, McCormick, the reaper, CHARLES GOODYEAR, Peter Cooper, the inventor of glass, John Ericsson, Henry Burden, Rowland Hoe, the proprietor, Howe, of the sewing machine, and others. The painting is by Sonntagh, of Philadelphia. Some of the portraits are very good, and the grouping and general effect of the picture are very creditable to the artist, and worthy of the subject. Some of the heads display fine painting. That of Peter Cooper, who, by-the-way, however distinguished he may be for other good qualities, would seem hardly to deserve a place in a collection of American inventors, unless the number were greater than is comprehended in this picture. His head, however, is painted with such force and picturesque effect, that we should be sorry to erase it from the picture. The painting has been engraved, and copies are for sale by GOURIE & Co.

We should not be doing justice to our

FRIDAY, Dec. 4—P. M.

The supply of money on the Market at 7 ⅌ cent. is gradually on the increase. The demand from the Brokers to-day was not so active as earlier in the week. The Treasury is paying out the reserve of $50,000,000 legal tender currency, under the act of July 11, 1862, in substitution of the Deposits recently withdrawn. About ten millions have thus far been employed. The remainder will be paid out in the next few weeks if required for the easy and convenient working of the Department. The effect upon the Money Market of the recent fifty million negotiation with the Associated Banks of the great cities, was to reduce the line of Treasury Deposits, which stood at the maximum of one hundred millions, nearly one half. The act of July 11, 1862, which increased the authority to receive these Deposits from fifty to one hundred millions, wisely provided that if the excess over fifty millions should be drawn out, as it has been, the Secretary could add a corresponding amount to his active Legal Tender Circulation. This he will accordingly do, in place of contracting or accepting of any proposition from the Associated Banks to make further advances upon his interest-bearing Legal Tender Notes. And for the sufficient reason that should such a negotiation be entered upon, and the effect upon the Money market prove the same as the last unfortunate apple of discord of this nature, he would seem to be deprived of the remedy of his temporary Deposits. We do not believe that the great body of our City Bank officers desire to make further advances upon the interest-bearing Notes of the Treasury, which, as Legal Tender for their face, can as well be paid out directly to the public and with more convenience to all parties, than to lodge them in bank to be periodically drawn against to the annoyance of the Money market. It is barely possible that some of these gentlemen would like to control the forthcoming one year issue of these Legal Tender Notes, but there is no probability that the Secretary will give them such a preference—particularly as the newly-established National Banks are solicitous to take a good share of the notes, to be held as their 25 ⅌ cent. reserve, under the National Banking Law, in place of ordinary greenbacks, which they are now compelled to hold.

The price of Gold was put up to 154 ⅌ cent. last night, after our report went to press, under a speculative excitement for the rise. This morning the sales returned to 153¾@154¼ ⅌ cent., and fell off at one time to 152@151¾ ⅌ cent. In the afternoon the price was 152½ again—the closing quotation at 4 o'clock yesterday. Bills on London, 166@167 ⅌ cent.

The Share list opened dull at the early Board, and prices were partially lower on the Railways, while the miscellaneous shares were comparatively steady. The transfers of the New-York Central closed for the annual election this afternoon. The contest for cash stock is now over, though it is said that considerable premiums are still being paid for the use of proxies on Wednesday next. The canvass between the Corning and the opposition interests excites much attention, and opinions differ widely as to the probable result. Erie Common shares, which have been heavily sold through the week, at from 104 to 108 ⅌ cent., opened at 108¼ at the First Board—the same as yesterday morning—and went up to 106 ⅌ cent. at the Afternoon Board. The Western list steady in the forenoon, and disposed to firmness at the close of the Second Board.

At 4 o'clock the increasing ease in the supply of Money at 7 ⅌ cent. was felt on the Street. Prices for the Railways and the general market were ½@2 ⅌ cent. higher than in the forenoon. The price of Gold was also firmer, on the probable shipment of a million and a quarter by the Liverpool and Southampton steamers to-morrow. Bills on London are 167 ⅌ cent. The following quotations were made in comparison with Thursday night. The telegraphic news by the Scotia some days ago of a quieter state of things in the English money market is confirmed by the mail delivered by the steamer this morning:

The payments into the Treasury to-day for the Popular Loan amount to $744,600. The office now holds ten millions in Gold, with a daily gradual increase from Customs over the demands for interest on the Public Debt. The amount of Legal Tender held this morning was about $7,500,000, and at Bank the amount was $20,400,000, or seven millions above the average required under the modified rule of the Clearing-house Committee. The amount in the Treasury will [illegible]

Trade in Dry Goods was dull, and prices of most articles were trending downwards early in the week. With the subsequent rise in Gold and Sterling Exchange, however, buyers were encouraged to purchase more freely of all desirable fabrics, at firmer and advancing prices. The market closes quite buoyantly, especially for domestic goods, the available supply of which is very moderate for the season. At auction, the offerings have not been attractive, and the sales passed off spiritless. In Philadelphia, according to the North American of this morning, "The Dry Goods market has been inactive this week, but closes with a better feeling and with more firmness on the part of jobbers, especially for Brown Cottons, which keep well sold up and firm. Bleached goods are steady, and Canton Flannels, Ticks, Checks and Stripes season and high. Prints remain unchanged. In Woolens there is a firmer feeling, and all good styles sell well, and for some kinds prices are better, and the stocks generally are much reduced."

The import entries of Foreign Dry Goods at the port of New-York for the week ending Dec. 3 were $1,093,412, against $498,096 same week last year, and $195,930 the corresponding week of 1861. The following is the summary for the week:

Messrs. CHANDLEY & HAYES, private Bankers, whose newly constituted firm we announced some weeks ago, advertise in this paper that they have opened business in the late office of Messrs. LIVERMORE, CLEWS & Co., No. 34 Wall-street. The new house is one of substance in point of capital and long experience in practical banking in the neighboring cities of New-Haven and Brooklyn.

Among the passengers from Europe who returned home by the Scotia this morning is Mr. AUGUST BELMONT, of the Banking firm of A. BELMONT & Co.

The First National Bank in the City of Baltimore was organized on Wednesday. President, Hon. THOMAS SWANN; Directors, Thomas Swann, John Clark, Columbus O'Donnell, Johns Hopkins, Benjamin Deford, Wm. J. Albert, Wm. H. Hooper, Thomas Kelso and Horace Abbott. One million one hundred and ten thousand dollars have been subscribed.

Messrs. ADRIAN H. MULLER, P. S. WILKINS & Co. hold their regular auction sale of stocks, &c., to-morrow, (Saturday,) at 12½ o'clock, at the Exchange salesroom, No. 111 Broadway.

The Reading Railroad Company announces a yearly dividend of 7 ⅌ cent., payable in common stock, on and after Dec. 1. A half-yearly dividend of 3½ ⅌ cent., payable in cash or common stock, has been declared on the preferred stock.

The Oswego and Syracuse Railroad, at a meeting of the Directors, at Syracuse on the 3d, declared a dividend of 2 ⅌ cent., payable Feb. 20. The condition of the Company is most satisfactory. Road bed and equipment ample and all in the best order. Operating expenses have never exceeded 50 ⅌ cent. of the earnings. After paying 7 ⅌ dividends in the year the balance Sept. 30, the close of the fiscal year, was $42,000 in cash, equal to 9 ⅌ cent. on the capital.

Cincinnati Provision Trade.

From the Price Current, Dec. 2.

The receipts of hogs have been quite large, and this, with the decline in gold in the late part of the week, depressed prices somewhat, and also weakened the faith of some in the supposed great scarcity of pork, required necessary to justify the rates current for the article. On Saturday night the weather, which had been wet and mild, became cold, and on Sunday there was a hard frost with light snow, and this continued up to the close, and furnished excellent sleighing, rather early in the season. Hogs are arriving rather slowly, farmers not seeming as anxious to hurry them in as last week and previous; but we may look for liberal receipts the coming two or three weeks. The course of the market during the week has been as follows: Wednesday, the market opened steady and firm, but the demand was not pressing. The receipts were light, and drovers were firm as a general thing, but the news from New-York regarding the decline in gold, had rather a depressing influence on the market, though it could not be said that there was any change in prices. Light sales of 30 to 35 ⅌ 100 lbs. Thursday was observed as a holiday, and the Exchange and business houses generally closed. Not much done in hogs, chiefly because there was but little inducement to operate in them. Friday, the market was dull, and a large number offering, so eager to sell was the whole range, and even at these rates the demand was light. Extra large weights have brought $7 25. Drovers were not disposed to make such concessions as would induce purchasers to buy. The sales were but few. Saturday, the market was very dull and prices nominal. The receipts were large, and it was exceedingly difficult to give quotations approximating accuracy, but it seemed to be generally conceded that 200 lbs. averages could not have been sold at the prices ruling on Friday. The last sale we heard of was 700 head, averaging 240 lbs., at $7 25. Monday, the market opened dull, and there was a general pressure to sell in the forenoon, and but few buyers, but on 'Change the demand was rather better, the receipts not proving as large as had been expected. There was no change in prices, however, and the whole range must be called $7 to $7 25, as 75 being the rate for hogs averaging 200 lbs. The receipts were hardly of 10 ⅌,000 head for the three days, estimating those driven in. After 'Change, the demand became quite brisk, and prices advanced 5c. ⅌ 100 lbs. Yesterday, the market opened brisk, and prices further advanced—hogs arriving 200 lbs. selling quite readily at $7. The market closes firm, and the demand good.

The receipts during the week, and for the season, and comparatively for some previous seasons, were as follows:

We have but little reliable data regarding the number packed at other leading places. At Indianapolis about 40,000 have been got to date. The packing generally falls behind last season to date, however, and there is a falling off in the weight of fair to fine lots, although the general condition of the hogs is better than had been expected. The state of the market at Chicago we give from a most reliable source in another column. In Pittsburg there has been but little done, and with the exception of a speculative purchase of 3,000 bbls. new Mess Pork, which was made at $18, part on Canada account, the business of the week was devoid of interest. The decline in Gold in the early part of the week caused sellers to withdraw, but holders are firm and generally confident, and there is but little pressure to sell. Lard has not been much inquired for, but is held firmly at 12c., though a few small lots sold at 11½c. Old Lard is held at 11½c.; new head and gut, 10½c.

Old and New Tobacco Regions.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, referring to the old and new tobacco-growing regions, says:

"The old region seems to be bounded on the east and west by the Atlantic Ocean and the Mississippi River, on the south by about the line of 36° of north latitude, on the Nashville district, extending to the Ohio River, a distance in breadth of about 200 miles.

"The Missouri crop is the only exception to this general view. Tobacco may and has been successfully cultivated in all the Northern States, to a limited extent only, on account of the average low range of prices. The production, in consequence, (this season, only partial, in tobacco, confined to limited lands,) the present season, is no argument against the successful production of tobacco. It might, in the same sense, be applied to the future production of corn. To what extent the last has been stimulated, and will be stimulated, in the last region, comprising the Free States, is a question to be solved by buyers and producers. A people who have shown their ability to supply the grain markets of the world at lower prices than any people have ever done, have not been behind others in the production of tobacco (fully three hundred per cent. above the cost of production). The sellers of Tobacco, the present season, have taken a wide range that the usual crop statistics will not be obtained until it is thrown in bulk, when it will probably be shown that the crop of 1862, grown in the old and new regions, is the largest ever produced on this Continent. The Kentucky crop is estimated at fifty millions of pounds over any former year. It must be conceded that the present prices of Tobacco are based on Exchange. At the above produce like effects, it may be useful at this time to refer to the effect produced on the Tobacco market by the great Hard Money agitation of 1839, which, we hope, is now a heavy rate of Exchange against this country. Tobacco then, as now, became the favorite medium of Exchange between this country and England. Prices ran up to about present rates, which so far stimulated production that they suddenly declined to one dollar per hundred pounds for logs, and about three cents for good tobacco. So great was the accumulation of stock that the market remained prostrate from 1840 to 1847—a fact familiar to thousands of operators. If by any act of Congress or from other causes Exchange become equalized between this and England, a similar revulsion in prices would immediately follow, as prices in England would be compelled to sympathize with prices on this side. Perhaps the most alarming feature to the American shipper is the heavy advance by the Bank of England in her rate of interest, which will doubtless be further advanced, and if found inadequate to check the export of gold from England a suspension of specie payments in Europe will follow, equalizing Exchange of itself, for there could be no premium on Exchange drawn against our money."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

Gen. Lee does not seem inclined to permit the Army of the Potomac to settle quietly down for the Winter in the location where Gen. Meade has fed it. On Thursday night, telegraphs our correspondent, an attempt was made by the enemy, in force of cavalry, infantry and artillery, to cross the Rapidan at Raccoon Ford. The movement was detected, and the cavalry division under Gen. Custer turned them back in confusion. This incident gave rise to a rumor that the whole rebel army was advancing to offer battle, and Gen. Meade made preparation for the emergency.

Respecting the movements of Grant's army, the telegraph still preserves silence. A dispatch dated yesterday at Chattanooga says that the weather is excellent, and the roads are in such good condition that the column of troops sent to relieve Burnside have probably reached within striking distance of Longstreet. Refugees from Northern Georgia report that in all that region a reign of terror exists, and that the rebel authorities are conscripting males and everything else they require for their shattered troops. In obedience to the clamor for the removal of Bragg, Jeff. Davis has displaced his favorite, and appointed Gen. Hardee in his stead.

The news from Knoxville confirms the reported repulse of Longstreet, in the fight of Sunday last. A dispatch from Knoxville, from an official source, dated the 30th November, says everything was all right. A cavalry fight had occurred near Cumberland Gap between Foster's and Longstreet's cavalry. Our forces captured four guns.

Advices from Charleston Bar to Dec. 1, announce little change in the position of affairs. The bombardment of Fort Sumter had almost entirely ceased, as the work for all warlike purposes had been rendered unserviceable. Its west wall had been undermined by our fire and had fallen into the sea, and the rebels display no flag over the ruins. Gen. Gillmore has turned his attention to the fortifications on Sullivan's Island, and with such effect that two of them are said to have been destroyed. Shells are also thrown into Charleston at the rate of twenty a day, and the inhabitants are said to have deserted all the buildings within range of our guns. A panic prevails among the people and the troops are scarcely a whit more courageous than the civilians at the prospect before them. They believe that Gen. Gillmore's operations will inevitably end in the capture of the city. Much destitution exists among the poor of Charleston and Savannah, and deaths from starvation have occurred. The rebels, with accustomed duplicity, took advantage of the respect which is everywhere paid by us to the hospital flag, to construct a strong battery behind the Moultrie House on Sullivan's Island, over which the signal of sickness was flying. A few days since they razed the hotel, and opened fire from the work which they had built under circumstances so dishonorable.

A band of guerrillas, whose depredations upon private property and repeated murder of our pickets at Washington, N. C., have long called for redress by the visitation of condign punishment upon the offenders, were dispersed on the 27th ult., by a force of cavalry, consisting of two companies of the Twelfth New-York regiment and one of the First North Carolina. Four of the guerrillas were killed, one of whom was a Lieutenant, and sixty-two were made prisoners.

GENERAL NEWS.

The greater portion of the President's Message is in type. On the reunion question it will be quite brief, and of very conservative tendency: in fact, the President declares that we have not yet arrived at that point in the progress of the war where so great a question can be clearly discussed. The message will not be as long as preceding ones.

The Montreal Gazette says that the Canadian Government has been for some time engaged in considering the best way to protect our fellow-subjects against the insidious attempts of persons who may come there for the purpose of obtaining recruits for the American army. Proper officers have been sent along the lines to keep a watch upon the proceedings of any person who may endeavor to make money by these practices, and to caution any residents who may be tempted to speculate in the business of procuring substitutes.

The notorious rebel guerrilla Frank Gurley, charged with the murder of Brig.-Gen. Robert L. McCook, is now in custody, and will be tried by a Military Commission, at Nashville, appointed by Gen. Thomas for that purpose. Col. John F. Miller, Twenty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, is President.

The important case of J. W. Lee vs. the United States, is now on trial in Louisville, before Judge Catron. In November, 1862, Brig.-Gen. Shackelford seized $111,000 in gold, bank notes, Treasury notes, &c., in possession of Lee, upon the ground that it was going South, and was the property of one Mengelle, of Canada. The United States claims that the money is forfeited. Gen. Shackelford claims half as informer, and Surveyor Cotton claims a share. Lee claims a share in his own right, and the balance as the bailee of Mengelle.

The many friends of Col. Francis M. Rotch will be pained to learn that his death occurred very suddenly, at his residence in Morris, Otsego County, on the 28th ult. He was ill only three days, of congestion of the brain, and died at the early age of 41. Col. R. served in the Senate of this State during the sessions of 1860 and 1861, and was afterward employed by Gov. Morgan in the military service. He was a gentleman of many sterling qualities, and his demise is a loss to the State and the country.

Rev. H. W. Beecher had an enthusiastic reception in Philadelphia, on Thursday evening, at the Academy of Music. Gov. Curtin made an eloquent welcoming address, and Mr. Beecher entertained the immense audience for an hour and a half.

The price of Gold fell on yesterday 152½ per cent, as against 152¾ the day before. Exchange on London, 167. The supply of Money is easier, at 7 @ 7 per cent. The Railway Stocks firm, and upward at the close of the day.

Breadstuffs were in fair demand yesterday. Desirable lots of Flour were firm, and of Wheat a shade dearer. Corn and Oats were rather cheaper. Cotton was more freely offered, and purchased, at easier prices. A good inquiry prevailed for Hay, Leather, Fruit, Metals, Tallow, Whisky, Salt, Tobacco, and the principal kinds of Provisions, at buoyant prices. Oils, Hemp, Seeds, Fish, Sugars and Skins were in moderate request. A fair business was reported in the freight line, with an upward tendency in rates.

The War as Regenerative of the South.

The war, as prosecuted against the rebels, is usually talked of as simply preservative of our Government and free institutions. Of course, that is its direct object, without which it would never have been waged. But there never was a great war yet, the effect of which was limited by its design. A great war is the greatest shock human society ever sustains; and it is sure to unlock agencies and causes, both material and moral, of tremendous force, which before were entirely unthought of, or, at all events, unheard for. Perhaps there may occasionally have been, in history, a barren and sterile war—a war which literally left a people in statu quo ante bellum; but if they have ever existed at all, they have been very rare. At all events, it is certain that throughout all modern history, war has ushered in every great step of national progress. Modern England was made what it is by the civil war which carried Charles I. to the scaffold; modern Germany by the thirty years' war of the seventeenth century; modern France by the civil and foreign wars of the French Revolution; and modern Italy by the internal wars which have taken place within the last fifteen years. It is impossible to name a nation in Europe, great or small, that has experienced a real regeneration but by the baptism of blood. And in Asia, too, so far as there have been any important national changes, the sword has invariably opened the way for them. It was the bloody force of England that broke up the dreadful religious and civil despotisms that had held India down for centuries and ages. It was the same violence that has opened the gates of China to every redeeming influence. And it is that also which alone promises to make Japan fairly accessible to civilization and Christianity. It is not the war itself that regenerates—for that may spring from the most unjustifiable motives and be conducted in the most unwarrantable manner—but the regeneration comes from the agencies which the war necessarily takes with it, or draws in its train.

It is the special business of our Northern soldiers to compel the Southern people to submit to the Federal Constitution. They are accomplishing that business successfully and gloriously. But the very process necessarily carries with it other effects quite extraneous to any mere subjection to the Constitution. Our soldiers, in spite of themselves, are crusaders and propagandists. Every step they take in advance is an Anti-Slavery step, for the simple reason that military law accompanies them, and that law knows no such thing as Slavery. But more than that, their every word is Anti-Slavery. It is not possible that half a million free, intelligent men of the North, accustomed to all the offices and all the associations of free schools and free labor, should be transferred to the benighted and poverty-stricken regions where Slavery has reigned, and preserve silence upon the contrast. There is hardly a man of them, whose every word to a Southerner, whether he means it or not, is not an argument against Slavery. Nay, we might say that the very sight of the Union armies is a testimony against the institution. It is a notorious fact that few things are more surprising to the lower classes of the South—who constitute the great bulk of the population—than the rations which our soldiers are accustomed to receive. It is a revelation to them that wheat bread and fresh meat, and coffee, and sugar, and pepper and salt, and other such articles of food are commonly used at the North by men of all classes—that what they consider to be rare luxuries are there regarded as nothing more than the mere necessaries of life. This vast difference in the habits and enjoyments of daily life between the common people of the North and the South is forced upon the attention of the latter, wherever our armies go; and it cannot help starting earnest inquiry and new ideas. Nobody doubts that if a New-England or a Western State were transferred bodily to the South, so that every Southern man could be a personal witness of its material and mental advancement, it would form a practical argument against Slavery of infinitely more potency than all other arguments combined. But this same thing is in no small degree realized, when our hundreds of thousands of men are sent there from every Northern State, with all their high intelligence and all their notions of comfortable life. The non-slaveholders of the South, ignorant though they are, are not so deficient in natural sense as not to perceive this contrast, and not to know that there must be some strong reason for it. Nor, though they are dull enough in all their sensibilities, are they so apathetic as not to care for an improved condition, or not to contract a hatred of Slavery when they see that Slavery stands in the way of such improvement.

All these influences necessarily attend the prosecution of the war, and operate with constantly increasing force while the war is prolonged. They have combined to greatly weaken already, if not entirely destroy, the partiality of the common people of the South toward the institution throughout all those parts of the South which have been occupied by our armies; so that even if the war should cease to-morrow, and every Northern soldier be withdrawn, it is doubtful whether any effort of the slaveholders to reestablish their social system would succeed. But it is certain that the war will not cease to-morrow. The slave power, with that judicial blindness which always descends upon those whom Heaven intends to destroy, is resolved to fight the old flag to its last foot of soil. Our armies will have to sweep over the entire South before the great object of the war—the reestablishment of constitutional authority—can be compassed. Thus all the attendant Anti-Slavery consequences of an occupation by our armies must be everywhere felt. Moreover, it is also certain that even after the war is closed great numbers of our Northern soldiers will remain at the South as permanent residents; and that they, in conjunction with tens of thousands of Northern civilians of enterprise, who will emigrate to the South, will exert a controlling power in the reconstruction of Southern society. Free labor will thus be efficiently organized to take the place of the system which the war has destroyed.

There cannot be a rational doubt that this mighty conflict, which was accepted by our Government simply to maintain its constitutional authority, is destined, by its indirect consequences, to effect a complete transformation of Southern society. It will form an epoch just as momentous to that portion of our country as the most signal blood-inaugurated epoch in the history of any European nation. To insure this, we have simply to remain faithful to the original purpose of the war, and let its collateral agencies take their natural course.

Military Prospects for the Winter.

Seasons of intense activity, with alternations of comparative repose, form the ebb and flow of all great wars. We have just passed through one of the grand climacteric periods, resulting in a series of great operations in the West, and at least of portentous movements in the East; and the fact that the season naturally fitted for field-work is passed, and Winter and the "skyey influences" adverse to military operations are upon us, gives plausibility to the opinion that we may now have a period of comparative quiescence, and that our armies will go into Winter quarters. This of itself, to be sure, would not absolutely determine the cessation of active work; and if we should judge by the history of last year, when the month of December witnessed two of the greatest battles of the war—that of Fredericksburgh, in Virginia, and Murfreesboro, in Tennessee—there would be little to indicate such an intermission of operations. But the circumstances of December, 1863, and of December, 1862, are widely different. In the West a great aggressive army, threatening the invasion of Kentucky, fronted Rosecrans, and it was in the last degree desirable to foil that intention by dealing the rebels a telling blow. In Virginia the spirit of "On to Richmond" still controlled our military policy. No such necessity and no such prompting now weigh upon us. Our great army of the West holds a position which makes all attempts at the offensive on the part of the rebels madness. Gen. Grant is master of the situation, and the mastery, too, is of a kind that makes military operations in Virginia of quite subordinate moment. Both our armies have secured coignes of vantage where they can securely rest for the Winter; and there is no commanding military necessity to instigate a Winter campaign.

Military operations during the Winter months, with the roads and weather of Virginia and Tennessee, are confessedly attended by the greatest difficulties. They are not, indeed, impossible, for we have made them ourselves, and they have been made in other wars; but it is necessarily at the expense of a prodigious wear and tear of all the material and moral agencies. It is this consideration that has made it a maxim in war, that in Winter active military operations shall cease, and armies go into cantonments. The maxim bears on warfare in our own country with a weight unknown in European countries. It is not a question whether or not Gen. Grant and Gen. Meade might not be able to undertake new campaigns this Winter; the point is whether it would not be better economy, and give better results in the long run, to allow our armies, during the coming three months of uncertain weather and roads, a season of repose, recuperation and renovation, rather than to fritter it away in enterprises from which we can fairly expect no commensurate results, but which would leave our soldiers in the Spring exhausted and used up.

These three months can doubtless be turned to most faithful account by the chiefs of our two grand armies. Both armies are exhausted by a season of most intense activity, that has whirlwinded on each theatre of war three great battles. It is difficult for those at a distance to realize the state of prostration in which a series of such campaigns as have marked the past year leaves an army. Our army in Virginia and our army in Tennessee has each three good months' work before it—work which may not be apparent to those stay-at-home hot-heads who breathe only of battles and bloodshed, but which is none the less real and essential, and will appear so in the long run.

We have no intention to intimate by these observations that the campaign is positively closed for the Winter; for the very desperation of the enemy may prompt him to desperate enterprises, or, on the other hand, opportunities may present themselves, offering such commanding advantages as to prompt the offensive on our part. But if neither contingency arises, and our armies shall retire into Winter quarters for the next three months, we say these months can be most usefully spent, and there is no reason why the country should feel otherwise. It must be borne in mind, that while we shall gain by every day of delay, the rebels must lose by every day of delay. We shall start in the Spring with refilled ranks and renovated armies for a grand, final, triumphal campaign.

City Car and Omnibus Nuisances.

The Brooklyn Common Council certainly deserve the thanks of the community for having made the first move toward reforming the car and omnibus abuses. But we are sorry to see that there is some hesitation amongst the Aldermen as to the greatest abuse of all, and that is the crowding of the cars. As compared with this every other sinks into insignificance. It is an offence of the rankest kind against public decency and the public health—we will say nothing of the public comfort—and there is not a particle of excuse for it. The only thing that can justify the grant of a monopoly of the principal public streets to these railroad companies, is their undertaking to carry all who seek it, in a proper manner, on a seat, and with a sufficiency of good air, and room for their legs, and comfortable ingress and egress. The monopoly has been granted without exacting a single condition on these points. Nobody else is allowed to meet the public requirements by competition, and those who are in possession of the tracks are allowed to do as they please.

The rule proposed in the Brooklyn Common Council, that nobody should be obliged to pay a fare unless he was provided with a seat, is not in our opinion what it ought to be, but it is still good. It would furnish a strong inducement to the companies themselves to prevent the overcrowding; though we fear the majority of passengers would hang on to the "straps" and pay all the same, with that sheeplike submissiveness for which the traveling public in America is so notorious. But in our opinion it ought to be the duty of the police, as it is in other cities, to put a stop to the practice. The persons who have most reason to complain of it are those who have obtained seats, and who then find the centre of the car blocked up by a mass of new arrivals, who rob them of light and air, and fill up the passage to the door. In nine cases out of ten these persons would not venture to remonstrate, as if they did so, they would expose themselves to the abuse or assaults of any rowdy who chose to stand and pay five cents for the privilege of swinging by the straps. The true remedy is to make the conductor liable to a fine or the revocation of his license for admitting more than a certain number of passengers into a car, and at the same time exempt the passenger from the necessity of paying unless he is provided with a seat. This would stimulate the conductor into finding room for him, instead of, as at present, leaving it to the good nature of those who are seated, or the passenger's own enterprise. Or better still, it would stimulate the companies into dividing the seats by an iron partition, if they are not compelled to do it by ordinance, which, in our opinion, they ought to be, and thus enable any one entering to see at a glance whether there is a vacant place, and if so, where.

We submit to the Common Council whether, as we have already borrowed our Police system from one European city, it would not be well to take a few other hints from another as to the mode of regulating public conveyances. European Governments have had a much larger experience in the art of providing for the safety and comfort of great masses of men in cities than we have. Large cities in this country are still a novelty, and our authorities are hardly yet awake to the wide difference which exists between the requirements of such a city as New-York, and the small communities of which the United States was until very recently made up. We think, therefore, the Parisian manner of dealing with companies and conductors is worthy of imitation, or, at least, of examination. There is certainly no city in which the public convenience is so carefully attended to as Paris. The precautions taken there to prevent the overcrowding of vehicles are most elaborate. There are stations along the omnibus routes, in which passengers are handed a ticket containing a number indicating the order of their entrance. When the stage passes, if there are any vacant places, they take them in their turn; if there are none, or not enough, those who have not been accommodated wait for the next. Whenever an omnibus is full, the conductor is obliged to exhibit a plate over the door, with the word "COMPLET," (full,) painted on it in large letters. When there is a vacant place he turns it down.

Bragg, the Great Retreater.—It was at Pensacola, Fla., that Gen. Braxton Bragg began fighting for the rebellion, and if he keeps on retreating, he is likely soon to be back somewhere in that vicinity. In the Fall of last year he and his army were in Northern Kentucky, and fought a battle at Perryville. His present position, if he has a position, is about midway between Perryville and Pensacola. Bragg's perpetual order to his army is "Backward, march!" Nothing but the Atlantic Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico will give him pause.

Consumptives in the Army.

We read with great astonishment, in article 6 of Circular 100, just issued from the Provost-Marshal-General's office, that "incipient consumption does not exempt" a drafted man from service. It is not necessary to be a medical man to know that as soon as incipient consumption is detected in anybody, it needs the most extraordinary precautions and exertions on the part of the patient to prevent its passing into the next stage. We know that it requires an amount of care as regards air, exercise, diet and mode of life to prevent its becoming confirmed consumption, which, unhappily, only a very small number of those who are attacked by this terrible disease, are able to take. In short, owing to the fact that the mass of the community cannot either travel, or take horseback exercise, or drink good wine, or give up their ordinary occupations and devote themselves entirely to the care of their health, the per centage of recoveries from the first stage of the disease is so small as to be not worth counting.

It follows from all this that to take a man in whom the seeds of the disease are beginning to show themselves, and expose him to the hardships of a soldier's life, to the coarse and often irregular diet, the long and severe marches, the bad water, the watching, the excitement, the violent alternations of temperature, the malarious atmosphere, which no soldier in active service, especially in such a country as ours, can possibly avoid, is to sentence him to death, just as certainly and as inexorably as if he were ordered to be shot. No doubt he will not die in the army; two or three months of campaigning will make him weak enough and useless enough to entitle him to his discharge; but he will come home to die, and will linger on without even the consolation of a pension. If he enter the service with incipient consumption, and he is discharged merely owing to the natural progress of the disease, he cannot swear, as the act of Congress requires him to do, that he has been discharged in consequence of "a disease contracted in the service and in the line of his duty."

But no man either enlists or ought to be drafted with the certainty of dying in the service. What the soldier undertakes is to run the ordinary risks of war, and no more; and the ordinary risks of war give every soldier a very good chance of coming home safe and sound, and a still better chance of coming home with only such trifling disease or disability as will not prevent him from following the ordinary avocations of civil life. If a call were made to-morrow for volunteers to encounter certain death in the cause of the Union, we cast no slur on the patriots of the country when we say that uncommonly few of them would respond. If men were drafted for any such purpose, we venture to assert that the trouble of getting them to the rendezvous would be nearly as great as the trouble of fighting the South. Now and then, in the excitement or despair of actual conflict, men are known to fling themselves on hostile bayonets in a paroxysm of heroism. But the number of those who deliberately, and with a full knowledge of the nature of the step they are about to take, have offered to die for their country, has, so far, been exceedingly small. One such man appears in five hundred years, and the rarity of the sacrifice wins for him eternal fame. There has, so far, been only one Arnold in Switzerland, though there are to-day in Europe and America hundreds of thousands who, for a cross or a star, or even a "banquet" at Delmonico's, would mount the deadliest breach that ever opened the way to a hostile fortress.

We, therefore, do not see why this tremendous devotion should be exacted from consumptives, of all men in the world. What has this class done that it should be so honored? We can well understand why a strumous or scrofulous constitution, or why a tendency to consumption, either hereditary or acquired, should not exempt; for many a weak-lunged, ailing fellow who, behind a counter or in a workshop, has but the feeblest hold on life, may, by active open-air life in the field, be converted into a hardy, brawny campaigner. This is especially true of those drafted for the cavalry. But "incipient consumption" is something more than a tendency to consumption, and to send a man to the field in whom marked indications of it can be detected would be barbarous and impolitic. Probably he would die at home just as surely as in the army, but he would die in his own way, and on his own private account. The United States would have had no hand in expediting his dissolution. Moreover, we may add that, if this nation cannot be saved without the aid of consumptives, its chances of life are, in our opinion, dreadfully small.

Thoughtful Rebels.—In our present issue will be found, copied from a Georgia newspaper, a curious dialogue which took place between the gallant Gen. Lytle, of Ohio, who fell at the battle of Chickamauga, and the rebel narrator. It seems that the General had a "strange, unwavering, fanatical faith" that the Union forces would crush the rebellion, that our army would now strike at the heart of the Confederacy, which is Georgia, and that we would make short work of it. The rebel advised him to restrain boasting until he got "beyond the shadow of yonder mountain," (Lookout Mountain,) but afterward granted, for argument's sake, that our army would subjugate the South and restore the Union, and then asked what sort of Union it would be? adding, however:

"Both sides have now violated their sacred oath [illegible]

[illegible] yet are the untaught, therefore prejudiced, disloyalist should come from your side. Let your Congress annul Lincoln's Abolition proclamation, and guarantee to the South security of person and property, and propose to them to return under the compromise proposed by the Southern Commissioners at Washington, in 1860, and rejected by the Northern Congress, and stop this criminal war."

To this Gen. Lytle replied in very vigorous style, declaring that the war should be eternal, if necessary to prevent disunion, but closed the argument by saying:

"When our army has reached the heart of the rebellion, and dispersed the rebel army, I am for the Union as it was, and I shall insist that the South be invited back on the terms you proposed; but there is to be no peace nor parleying with armed rebels."

This dialogue, and its publication in a Southern newspaper, shows that the progress of the war is inducing reflection even among the most defiant rebels. This one, for example, who at first spoke after the most approved "last ditch" fashion, finally expressed his desire that "propositions of settlement" should come from our side, which is the strongest. We do not doubt, that since Gen. Grant has driven the rebel army from the shadow of Lookout Mountain, and all the mountains, there are a good many rebels in the State of Georgia arguing with themselves in this style.

OBITUARY.

Maj. Gilbert M. Elliott.

The body of the late Maj. Gilbert Moulton Elliott arrived here from Chattanooga on the 4th inst. A few facts concerning this promising and brilliant young officer may not be uninteresting to the many to whom he was known, either personally or by reputation. Entering the Free Academy at an early age, he passed through with distinguished honors, bearing away with him several of the gold medals. From his entrance until his graduation, he stood at the head of his class. Entering the army as Second Lieutenant immediately after his academical course, and at an early period of the struggle, he rose speedily to the rank of First Lieutenant, and soon after to that of Captain, and was attached to Gen. Grant's Staff. Shortly after the battle of Gettysburgh, in which he distinguished himself, he was, on the recommendation of his Commanding General, promoted to the post of Major of his regiment, while yet only 22 years of age, his division being shortly after transferred from the Army of the Potomac to the old of the Army of the Cumberland. In the late brilliant attack on Lookout Mountain by Gen. Hooker, Major Elliott was with his regiment, which suffered fearfully. He was killed while leading the storming party in that dreadful conflict, thus sealing with his young life his devotion to his country's cause. Major Elliott was universally beloved by all who knew him—a dutiful son, an affectionate brother, his loss to his immediate relations is irreparable. A. F. B.

Death of Col. Francis M. Rotch.

From the Albany Evening Journal.

Col. Francis M. Rotch died at his residence in Morris, Otsego County, on the 28th ult., aged 41. His death was sudden, and, until almost the last hour, unexpected. He had been ill only three days, and the disease terminated in congestion of the brain.

Col. Rotch was a young man of rare accomplishments, and of most winning manners. Carefully educated, he more than fulfilled the hopes and promises of his early youth. His father, Francis Rotch, Esq., being one of the most extensive and successful agriculturists in the State, (and one of the earliest Presidents of the State Agricultural Society,) our friend was naturally drawn to the same pursuits—in which he took great delight, and brought to them a highly cultivated mind and congenial tastes.

But he combined, with his fondness for the quiet pursuits of agriculture, a lively and intelligent interest in public affairs. Because of their knowledge of his eminent fitness for public life, the people of his district called him to the Senate in 1856, and he served through the sessions of 1860 and 1861 with distinction.

At the close of his Senatorial term, Gov. Morgan solicited his service in the Military Bureau of the State. The duties imposed upon him were arduous, and he entered upon them with all the ardor and enthusiasm of his generous nature. In the prosecution of these duties he was often required to visit the regiments in the field, and while so employed, he contracted with an illness which prostrated him for many months, and from which he never fully recovered. It undoubtedly formed the basis of the sickness which has now resulted fatally.

The Strikes.

MR. LINCOLN ON THE STRIKERS.

The New-York correspondent of Fincher's Trades Review, of Philadelphia, under date of Nov. 29 writes:

"The great strike continues in all its magnitude. The Committees sent by both parties have returned—ours has the inside track. The employers, taking time by the forelock, scarcely waited for the expiration of the three days' grace, ere they hurried off a Committee to secure a respite, in the shape of an extension of time on their work, so that the patriotic Christian souls could starve the worm that labors for his daily bread into submission, without loss to themselves. The Committee were furnished with the necessary documents to prove that we were growing rich. As a sample of their statements, I will give you one on wages; the Committee told the Secretary of the Navy that they were, and had been, paying machinists from two dollars and a half to four dollars per day, and to advance an additional twenty-five per cent, would ruin them. Their statement was not allowed to remain undented, for we had a Committee of the first class after them, headed by our worthy President.

Our Committee, immediately after its arrival, waited upon the President, and were received in a manner that showed conclusively the worthy old gentleman had not left all his sympathy for laboring men with his maul and wedges in the prairie State. After hearing our statement, he told us he could do nothing as President, but as Abraham Lincoln his sympathies were with us, and further, having risen from a rural district, he had never participated in a strike. The only one he had ever heard was a strike among the shoemakers of Haverhill, Massachusetts, some 15 or 16 years ago, in which the shoemakers succeeded in worsting their bosses. As to the present strike, he considered the employers the first strikers, as they refused to accept the terms offered by the men, and thereby compelled the latter to cease work, or, as they term it, go on a strike; and now that both were on a strike 'the best blood would win.'

He then recommended the Committee to call on the Secretary of the Navy, and, to insure prompt attention, gave them a note to the Secretary, asking an immediate interview, which, upon presentation, was granted. The Secretary informed the Committee that they had been anticipated by another Committee, and he then stated what they had said about the wages; also, that they had with them a series of resolutions that had never seen the light, but had been concocted in some secret session, and, as such, could not be received by him. He assured them (the employers) that no extension could be granted.

When our Committee heard the astounding falsehood in reference to wages paid, they promptly proposed to accept the rate of wages paid by any of the outstanding firms as they appear upon their books, and, if the same averaged two dollars per day for good workmen, the men now out would at once withdraw the demand for the advance and resume work. But the call was not responded to, for the Committee of silk-stocking and kid-glove order beat a hasty retreat when they found men with facts and figures close upon them. The Secretary assured our Committee that no extension of time could or would be granted by any one in his Department, as Congress alone possessed power to grant it.

Having discovered, from the highest sources, that the canard announcing an extension was entirely without foundation, the Committee returned, and on Thursday last reported to the Association. The report was received amid vociferous cheers, and the meeting adjourned with three times three for the President, the Navy Department and fair play. This seemed to be the dark movement that was to drive the bark home to the breasts of the would-be tyrants.

The Rebellion in St. Domingo.—Letters from St. Domingo of a late date, received in this city, speak of the entire stoppage of all business operations, in consequence of the rebellion, resulting in loss to American trade, which was considerable with that part of the island.

The number of Spanish soldiers killed within the past three months has been very large, and many begin to doubt the ability of the Spanish Government to maintain its position in the country. The story recently published in the United States that the Spaniards had demanded the right to march troops through Haytian territory, and had been refused, is, in all probability, incorrect.

Still, the troubles at St. Domingo affect the people of Hayti, and no one can foresee the complications that may arise. Intelligent Dominicans express the opinion that the people of that country would welcome the restoring power of the United States, which, at present, however, with our serious internal troubles, cannot be vouchsafed.—Boston Journal, Dec. 2.

A Walking Skeleton.

Some years ago DR. SCHENCK was a

WALKING SKELETON

about the streets of Philadelphia, and finally was reduced so low that he was unable to move any longer, and was taken over to New-Jersey

TO DIE.

There he lay confined to his bed, and Dr. Thornton said his lungs were all gone, and he would not live a week. In that low state he heard of, and obtained, some and made a medicine that, in a month, wrought a change in his whole system. It expelled all the matter from the lungs, cleansed from the stomach, started the liver, and, in fact, expelled all the morbid matter from the system.

HIS APPETITE

began to improve, and it was with difficulty he could be prevented from eating too much. Fetched the most nourishing food, and, in a short time, he began to IMPROVE RAPIDLY.

Now, he is a great, hearty man, weighing over two hundred and twenty pounds. His

PULMONIC SYRUP,
SEA-WEED TONIC, and MANDRAKE PILLS,

are a composition similar to the medicine that cured him. He is now traveling from one city to another, seeing patients and administering his medicines; and it is said he will take a person in the

and in a few weeks they are about in tolerable good health. His medicines change the whole system, and the patient soon begins to have

as the food nourishes the system he finds that he is getting healthy. Nature overpowers his disease, and he gets well. This is the great feature of

DR. SCHENCK'S MEDICINES;

they make new matter, new blood, and by keeping the digestive organs healthy disease must be expelled.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

HEARS NEW TESTIMONY.

READ.

HARLEM, July 28, 1863.

I have been deaf for over TWENTY-FIVE YEARS, and Dr. Von Eisenberg operated on both of my ears without the slightest pain—a thing that I could not believe could be done. I now hear well, and feel as I never did for the last twenty years. The dexterity and skill with which the operation was performed evince the highest practical ability. I hear perfectly. It is now over a month since the operation, and I continue to feel as well as ever.

CATARRH CURED.

NEW-YORK, Aug. 22, 1863.

I have been suffering for the last three years from a severe Catarrh, with a continual dullness in my head, a tightness across my chest, a weight over my eyes, which were weak, watery and very painful. My nostrils were continually obstructed with a pouring of fluid. I have had frequent sneezing, hoarseness of my voice, generally attended with spitting, often with a fullness of my throat, together with a soreness and a drooping. Dr. VON EISENBERG has cured me of all these disagreeable sufferings. I now feel a new life. The treatment of Dr. VON EISENBERG is as skillful as it is successful; it is impossible to overrate the benefit I have received at his hands. I heartily recommend any one suffering like myself to place themselves under Dr. VON EISENBERG'S care, with a certainty of being speedily cured. I give this with gratitude and pleasure. I cannot forbear again saying that my voice, which was hoarse and thick when I applied to Dr. VON EISENBERG, is now clear and good; indeed, I feel abundantly satisfied.

JAMES LITTLE,
No. 245 7th-st., New-York.

NEW-YORK, Sept. 1.

I have been suffering for years past from a severe Catarrh, with a great heaviness over my eyes, with a severe depression, great unwellness, and pain in my head, great difficulty in breathing, and a continual accumulation in my nostrils, which gave me restless nights for several years. I have consulted several physicians, who pronounced me to be consumptive. What I suffered for so long a time is indescribable. My system was entirely disarranged and greatly debilitated. I not only felt weak, but I had a cloud continually before my eyes, and my ears were so affected that I was threatened with a total loss of hearing. I must say, I think, I was guided by Providence to come to Dr Von Eisenberg, who not only cured me of my Catarrh by removing an astonishing quantity of disagreeable matter from my head, but has restored me to perfect health, a blessing I have not enjoyed for many years. Now I enjoy a good night's rest, and pursue my business with comfort. I must acknowledge that Dr. Von Eisenberg's mild and scientific treatment for Catarrh deserves the highest commendation, as the principle which directs his system of curing Catarrh is such as to render success certain.

JAMES FURGONG, No. 450 2d-av.

No. 136 ALLEN-st., New-York, Feb. 9, 1861.

I have been completely deaf in one ear, and partially so in the other, for above seventeen years, with a disagreeable discharge from both ears, combined with continual rumbling noise in the head, for which I have been treated by a most eminent practitioner in the City without the slightest relief.

Incredulous Dr. Von Eisenberg, but I must candidly say that I had no faith in his success when I did so. It is, therefore, due to Dr. Von Eisenberg to acknowledge that I am entirely cured; also, that he displayed that skill and knowledge which have procured for him such an unrivaled reputation. As I have had an opportunity of comparing his mode of treatment with that of others, I can truly state that it is not only superior, but the principles which direct his mode of restoring the hearing are, in my opinion, certain.

JOHN TAYLOR.

NEW-YORK, July 13, 1863.

This certifies that my mother has been for some time afflicted with partial deafness, suffering from pain, and rumbling noises in the head, together with other indications of a total loss of hearing. Dr. Von Eisenberg removed from her ears a great quantity of matter, together with congealed blood, relieving her instantaneously, and all without pain. His with grateful thanks that I give this testimony to his skill.

TESTIMONIAL FROM ONE OF THE MOST RESPECTABLE CITIZENS OF NEW-YORK.
DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED.

No. 420 SIXTH-AV., NEW-YORK, Dec. 2, 1863.

I was deaf for several years, and hearing of the great cures performed by Dr. Von Eisenberg, I was induced to place myself under his care. And I am now happy to state that my hearing was entirely restored after a short treatment. I was also suffering from chronic catarrh, of which I was also cured by the skillful treatment of Dr. Von Eisenberg. I do but justice to the Doctor in stating that in treating me he displayed that skill and knowledge which have already procured for him such a deserved reputation, and that the principles which direct his system of curing Deafness and Catarrh are such as to render success certain, in my opinion. Many months have passed since Dr. Von Eisenberg restored my hearing, and it continues as good as ever.

CHRONIC CATARRH CURED.

READ.

NEW-YORK, March 28, 1863.

This is to certify, that I have suffered from very severe CHRONIC CATARRH, with a dull heaviness in the head. I felt my nose completely stopped up accompanied by continual soreness of the throat, the chills stealing over me with exceeding hot flashes, a great lightness of the chest and pain, so much so, that every one thought it was consumption. Having heard of the great cures performed by Dr. Von Eisenberg, I consulted him with but little hope of a cure. I am now happy to be enabled to add my testimonial to the great number already in the Doctor's possession, as to his scientific and successful mode of treatment, as he has shown to my case that skill and knowledge which have procured for him so great a reputation. I am so entirely restored to perfect health that I do most sincerely recommend all sufferers from CHRONIC CATARRH and SORE THROAT to apply at once to Dr. Von Eisenberg with a certainty of being cured."

CONSUMPTION CURABLE!
THE TRUE ORIGIN DISCOVERED AT LAST AND THE NATURAL REMEDY FOR ITS SPEEDY AND PERMANENT CURE PLACED WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL.

The origin of Consumption and the treatment for its cure has received more attention from the medical profession, and with less good results, than all other diseases for which the human race are subject.

Consumption is in nearly every instance caused—First, by a chemical and functional derangement of the liver and digestive organs, which soon fills the blood and secretions with morbid elements; and, Nature, in her efforts to relieve the system from the unnatural substances, throws the majority of such into the system through the lungs and air-passages, and which, if long continued, or if there is any predisposition to lung disease, irritation, inflammation, and ulceration are soon developed, with all the symptoms of merely consumption.

Second—in connection with the above cause we have another which is not understood by physicians, and that is, a superabundance of action of the lungs, or in other words, they have been compelled to labor too hard. We say it comes from increased action of the lungs, produced by a want of proper and healthy action of other vital organs, thereby causing too much action of the lungs. That the machine may run well, all parts must be kept working and properly balanced. Thus it is with the human system. God, whose handiwork daintily fashioned this wonderful machine, has allotted to each organ a specific amount of labor, which, if properly and faithfully performed, will cause the machine to run smoothly and easily through life. But the moment one organ attempts to shirk its proper amount of labor, some other or another organ, that moment the harmony of the system is disturbed, and the organ, overtasked by its increased action, becomes, as a natural consequence, enfeebled and no longer able to perform even its ordinary amount of work, falls into inaction and disease.

Experience has demonstrated that the lungs of the human race are only half or third as large as they should be—that is, they are only half or third as large as those of the brute, in all cases where there is a lack of action in other vital organs, thereby throwing the entire labor of purifying the blood upon the lungs, and, consequently, they have not only half or third as much to do, but, in the greater part of cases where there is a lack of action, they have to perform the entire work of the other vital organs, thereby causing undue and unnatural exertion, and, consequently, great injury to the lungs. Now, if we can only prevent the lungs from performing the work of other organs, we shall prevent the disease of consumption in nine cases out of ten. Nature, in her efforts to throw off the poisonous matter, or, in other words, to cure herself of the disease, throws the matter into the lungs, and, if we can only aid her in such an effort, we shall do much towards a cure. In all cases where there is a lack of action, Lobb's Vegetable Liver Pills will be found a most valuable adjunct, as they will, in most cases, prove a sure remedy. They are purely vegetable, and perfectly harmless in their action, and may be taken by the most delicate without fear of injury, and, in most cases, will prove a speedy and certain cure. Now the question arises, what is the best method of performing the necessary amount of labor to cure the disease? Only half or third as much as it should do—that is the question, in

LAW REPORTS.

A Legal Status and a Military Provost-Marshal.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM.

In the matter of Charles E. Hopson, claimed to be illegally detained as a Volunteer.—This case came up on an order to show cause why the return to a writ of habeas corpus should not be held sufficient. An attempt was made to take the petitioner, Hopson, out of the custody of the United States Provost-Marshal for the Twenty-first District, Joseph P. Richardson, the Provost-Marshal, made return that he had arrested Hopson as a deserter, and "that it is the legal duty of respondent to deliver over the said deserter to the nearest military commander or military post, and that the respondent intends to perform said duty as soon as possible."

An order was entered to show cause why such return should not be held sufficient, and after hearing counsel on both sides, Justice Bacon decided—

"That the said return to said writ by said Richardson is sufficient in law, and the said Richardson is not and was not bound to bring the body of said Charles E. Hopson in Court, according to commands of said writ, and that a State Court or Judge has no jurisdiction to inquire into the truth of the fact alleged in said return, that said Hopson was or is a deserter."

The question of Judge Bacon is given at great length, reviewing the law in its fullest extent, and handling the matter for the sake and protection of three classes. In conclusion he says: "How anxious we now certainly it is to be filled with perpetual alarm lest our Government should grow too strong, and yielding itself of the means we give it for present preservation, turn and trample it in the dust the safeguards of personal liberty and hint out forever all constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech of the Press and of commerce. We guard with eagle-eyed vigilance the outposts and bastions of the constitutional fortress, while traitorous hands are mining beneath the citadel and applying the torch to the magazine. We insist on filching mint and anise, and cummin—preserving the Constitution in its minutest letter, and most straightened construction, and that, too, by the lawyers of those who have cast off its authority and repudiated its obligations, while we forget the weightier matters of the law, that the whole fabric of free institutions is in danger, and that there is a supreme rule of public safety—a spirit which looks to the conservation of national life higher than mere letter of parchment constitutions.

"Peace, I will scrupulously do nothing that shall weaken; I will omit to do nothing that may lawfully be done; that shall tend to strengthen the power of the National Government in this hour of peril, and nerve its arm in grappling with and overcoming this foul and atrocious rebellion. I know very well that it is the office of the Judiciary to stand firmly by the law, to lay its judgment to the line and righteousness to the plummet, for the humblest as well as the highest, and I hope not to be found wanting in fidelity, nor to be swayed from a wholesome judge by the shifting tide of interest on the side hand, or the gusty waves of passion on the other.

"But if, while following in the line of high and safe precedent, guided by the light that streams from the loftiest judicial watch-tower in the land, I can at the same time do something that may tend to perpetuate the institutions our fathers gave us, and lend vigor to the arm of the Government in the performance of its solemn and supremest duty to preserve, protect and defend our precious inheritance, to hold together in indestructible bonds, that glorious Union, ark of our political safety, and for abandon it a prey to faction, discomfiture, disorganized, belligerent, rent with civil feuds, and drenched in fraternal blood—if, in the exercise of a sound, I can contribute to such result, I perform a high and noble duty, in fraction and experience as its challenge a corresponding satisfaction.

"The writ of habeas corpus is discharged, and the prisoner is to remain in custody of the Provost-Marshal, to be dealt with according to law."

SURROGATE'S COURT.

Before Surrogate Tucker.

In the Matter of the Estate of Robert Hogan.—One Beebe, an alleged creditor of this estate, obtained an injunction against the executor, Roswell D. Hatch, some time since, which injunction it is claimed the executor and attorney for complaining in suits in the Supreme Court against said Beebe, while the order enjoining the executor from acting in the premises was in full force, and applied for an attachment against Mr. Hatch, for its violation.

On the order being returnable, the executor showed cause, and contended that the statute giving the Surrogate power to "control and direct" the conduct of executors and administrators did not apply to their proceedings in other Courts having legal and equitable jurisdiction, and that the Surrogates had never exercised such power in this State or in the Ecclesiastical Courts of England. (In the matter of Parker, 1 Bath. R., chap. 156; Grant vs. Quick, 5 Sandford, 612; Bennett vs. Lorge, 5 Abbott, 155.)

On motion of the executor, the attachment was denied.

The will of J. Jackson leaves his entire real estate to the Orphan Asylum of New-York, and makes the First Directors of that institution sole executrix of the will in respect to that bequest.

PERSONAL.

—"Parson," in his letter to the Charleston Courier, from Lookout Mountain, says:

"The appointment of Gen. Thomas as the successor of Gen. Rosecrans appears to afford a satisfaction throughout the army, and to none more than to Gen. Bragg. Thomas was his first lieutenant in Mexico; before the war he was a rabid Secessionist; since the war he has become a radical Abolitionist, and may be assumed up, mentally and physically, in the language of Gen. Bragg, as a 'brave, slow, obstinate, and perverse man.'"

A Copperhead paper of Philadelphia says in its issue of Dec. 2:

"It is no violation of social privacy for us to allude to the fact that a very distinguished assemblage of Philadelphia society was last night gathered together to meet the Hon. Edward Everett, and it is saying but complimentary to his eminent ability to suggest that his addresses have done and is doing very much to sustain the Administration in its present policy."

—The Cape Girardeau (Mo.) Eagle contains a long account of the breaking up, by the Provost Guard, of a social party at the residence of the widow of Lieut.-Gov. Bowen. While the guests were at supper the house was surrounded and the males shut up in one of the rooms, where they were kept without any breakfast until about 10 o'clock the next day, when they were turned loose without any charge having been lodged against them. The editor of the Eagle was one of the prisoners. It seems hints had been dropped that the party was a secession gathering, which is intensely denied.

—In the collection of the Bureau of Military Statistics, is an embroidery of a lady, which was found in the pocket of an unknown United States soldier at the battle of Antietam. Besides this picture, there was nothing upon the person of the deceased to indicate his name, his regiment, or even the State to which he belonged. The portrait represents a young woman of perhaps twenty-five years of age, of an intelligent and expressive countenance, but could be easily identified by any one who was acquainted with the original.

—There are two Rhine Wine Hotels in Poughkeepsie, and when one of them was married recently, the other indignantly refused to let papers with a denial. A counter-order and the publication of the marriage certificate set matters right.

THE AMERICAN TRANSLATION
OF RENAN'S LIFE OF JESUS

is beginning to make a stir on this Continent such as has rarely been known in the literary world.

IN PARIS

where it has just made its appearance, the excitement is supreme.

The French correspondent of the New-York Tribune says: "The ordinary dog-day calm in literature is broken this season by the storm that rages about Renan's 'Vie de Jesus.' The book is hardly two months out of the Press, and, if the bookseller's advertisement is credible, of it is already sold. It has in its favor, with the general reader, singular charms of style, and of a truly poetic, though firmly writtenly charmed sentiment. It is learned, deeply religious, utterly clear from sectarian fever and polemic violence."

25,000 COPIES

THE GREAT SENSATION NOVEL.

PECULIAR.

BY ROSE LAMBERT.

Teeming with an enormous sale, and so novelty, for as a production of what readers of judgment think, we quote from the Hackney Journal, which says:

"The story is tenuously interesting as a picture of our own times; it is surpassingly vigorous in its style, and Peculiar is its name. Of all works of fiction which will a moral purpose, we sincerely know of one which exceeds in its three qualities. As a story, it holds the reader as by a spell. As an argument, we can conceive of nothing more powerful than its spirit and blistering shafts. This is a most potent; put down and overtaken the lists."

"The multitude of admirers of Miss Warner's earlier productions will rejoice to learn that another book from her pen has just been issued. The theme is laid in England. The filling up the outline is accomplished with rare skill, and the same vein of Evangelical Christian truth and sentiment which ran through her former works still pervades the present. We have read the volumes with great interest, and predict for them an extensive circulation."—New-York Observer.

"The style is fascinating, the plot good, the characters well sustained, and the impression left on the reader must be salutary. The work will have a wide sale; and although we think there is too much fiction, and we rarely look at liberty to pronounce a romance, yet we must say we have no objection to this book. We believe that while it charms it will also instruct in what truth."—Christian Advocate and Journal.

MY DAYS AND NIGHTS

IN

THE BATTLE-FIELD.

By "Carleton."

1 volume, illustrated with engravings, maps and diagrams. Price $1.

The letters from the army by "Carleton," of the Boston Journal, have been marked for their clearness, correctness and vividness of description. They have been copied throughout the country and by the English Press. It has been the design, in this book, to give the young of the United States a narrative of his own personal observations of the valor and patriotism of those who are upholding the flag of our country; also, to present an authentic narrative of the positions and movements of the contending armies—to make it, in every respect, a truthful record, which, though written for youth, will be equally profitable and interesting to the adult and to the student of history.

No. 135 Washington-st., Boston.

Absolutely the most interesting novel of the day, only 15 in not known.—Boston Post.

MR. PARTON'S NEW WORK.

GEN. BUTLER AT NEW-ORLEANS,

excites the enthusiasm of loyal men and the wrath of Copperheads. The Boston Post, a Democratic journal of the old school, says of it: "All American readers know the ability of Parton with a subject like this Burr, Jackson, Butler—these are the jewels in his crown, and there is some Macaulay in his style. It is sharp and piquant in style; the stories illustrating the life of the boy, the lawyer, the man are well selected, and better told. Mr. Parton's book is absorbing, interesting, novel and of the day, only it is not a novel; it is like truth. Dealing with the stirring incidents that have surrounded the attention of the nation so far in this war, it is a history of many points of our national struggle; it is a gem of intelligent, which ever their culture, who know the facts, will be sufficiently interested and edified. It is a most racy, spicy, and readable book."

"The NEW-YORK DAILY NEWS, a Democratic journal of the conservative, on the contrary, is very angry and bitter, styling Mr. Parton a "literary toady," declaring that "the man who would praise such a man (as Butler) would praise a fiend," and that "Mr. Butler is a renegade, a parricide, a necessary circulation of the country, a woman." The conclusion of the whole matter with the News, with reference to this book, is that "as a literary and political curiosity it is therefore worth reading, on the principle that would render valuable a life of the devil."

 The truth is, that without any such design, this book is one of the most powerful, perhaps the most powerful, of all the Anti-Slavery books yet published. Price $1.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.
CROSBY & NICHOLS
respectfully announce that THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, which has for the last ten years been so ably conducted by Dr. PEABODY, passes now into the editorial charge of
PROF. JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL,
CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, Esq.,
gentlemen who, for sound and elegant scholarship, have achieved an enviable reputation both in this country and in Europe; and whose taste, education and experience eminently qualify them for the position they have assumed.

Of the future, it may be said that its change in the periodical which, under his editorship reached the summit of its fame, surpassed in vigor and force those of any contributor.

Of the latter, that he has "added new lustre to the name he bears, by his editorship of the Boston Daily Advertiser and by the literary and political work which he has published, both as a writer and a speaker."

And of both, that their thoroughly loyalty to the liberal institutions of our country, and their sympathy with the progressive spirit of the times, render them peculiarly fitted to conduct the Review, which has by competent authority been pronounced,

"THE LEADING LITERARY ORGAN OF THE COUNTRY," and of which it has been said that "IT HAS NOT ITS EQUAL IN AMERICA, NOR ITS SUPERIOR IN THE WORLD."

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW will maintain in the hands of its new editors its established reputation for independent criticism, and for well-considered opinions in politics and literature.

In discussing political and social questions, the spirit of the Review will be thoroughly national and loyal. It will defend and illustrate the distinctive principles on which the institutions of America are founded.

In literature it will avail itself of the best material of thought and scholarship which the country can supply.

In its criticism it will have no ends to serve but those of sound taste and just judgment.

Bound by strong associations to the past, in sympathy with the present, hopeful for the future, the Review will do its part in the intellectual development of the Union.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW is published quarterly on the first days of January, April, July and October, in numbers of about three hundred pages each, containing matter equal to an ordinary octavo volume.

TERMS—Five dollars a year, or one dollar and twenty-five cents per number.

A new volume of the Review will commence with the January number, and the publishers have no doubt that the renewed experiment, upon which the chief care proved in the future conduct of the work, will be met by a generous interest in the patronage of the public.

DEAFNESS AND CATARRH.

No. 23 Forsyth-st., New-York, Oct. 1, 1863.

Dr. Von Eisenberg:

DEAR SIR: Without recapitulating the numerous benefits I have received through your wonderful cure of the deafness I have labored under many years, the blessings I enjoy will convince the most sceptical.

I have tried many surgeons in Europe and America without success. I was still deaf as a post.

Three years ago I entered your office, underwent one operation, hoping, yet doubting. I should receive any relief, but was agreeably disappointed in finding the genius of your profession.

The innate skill you possess cured my deafness in one almost painless operation.

The joy I experienced was inexpressible; 'twas a new life to me.

My hearing is perfect to this day.

I strongly advise all who are suffering under a difficulty of hearing or nasal catarrh, to consult you immediately as I also personally recommend all who apply to me. The numerous calls troubles on my time and patience, yet, remembering my own long, weary affliction, causes me to pity them.

This is not written to advertise your well-known unrivaled reputation—that would be puerile; but as a measure of precaution to induce all to call on you at once without troubling me; yet I do not refuse to see any one who cannot obtain this is the only way I can show my gratitude.

I also call the attention of those who are suffering from Catarrh, which disease I have labored under one year or more.

I experienced difficulty in breathing, hoarser, heaviness over the eyes, a sense of lightness on the brain, and copious expectorations of a hard and thick nature. Accompanying this is a "polypus," quite filling the right nostril. On the 26th ult. you operated on both, killing the polypus, which is gradually passing away, and giving me great relief from the Catarrh. One more operation will effectually cure.

This testimonial brings with it my unalloyed and grateful thanks, with but a poor delineation of your wondrous skill as an Aurist.

I am, Sir, yours very gratefully,
EDWARD TEMPLE HARRISON.

The unprecedented success in private practice and the testimonial of HIGH MEDICAL AUTHORITY, enable us to recommend

IODINE WATER

for the cure of Scrofula in all forms, Consumption, Cancer, Bronchitis, Heart, Liver and Kidney Diseases; Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Affections, Female Weaknesses, Dyspepsia, Syphilis, Mercurial Disease, etc.

AS A TONIC,

its operation is evinced by strengthening the digestive organs and exciting the appetite. In cases of Dyspepsia, Emaciation and Debility, an increased nutrition of the body is the result of the employment of Iodine Water. The patient recovers flesh, strength and color; hitherto pale, relaxed and feeble, he becomes full, strong and florid.

Iodine Water is put up with full directions around each bottle, that it may be used as a family medicine as well as by the practitioner.

Physicians may rely upon the uniform strength of this solution, as containing ¼ grains of Iodine in each fluid ounce pure water—no solvent being used. It is not liable to decomposition nor spontaneously formed Iodoform; neither is the Iodine neutralized by combination with any ingredient, and as no unpleasant or injurious results can arise from its continued use, this solution will be found superior to any other method in which Iodine can be exhibited.

The great success which has attended the use of Iodine Water in our own practice, and in the hands of those who have used it, enables us to recommend it to the practitioner and the public as a superior remedy for the cure of Chronic diseases, which have resisted other treatment. Being confident that with a fair trial it will attest its own excellence.

The genuineness of this solution and its excellence as a medicine are attested by the names of such distinguished men as Dr. Jos. R. Chilton, Professor R. H. Parker, Professor Jas. C. Booth, Dr. E. Whitney, Dr. B. Klimpstein, and others.

Price $1 per bottle, $6 per half dozen. Sold by Druggists generally.

TESTIMONIALS.

The Bible Examiner for August, 1863, edited by the Rev. George Storrs, contains the following editorial notice:

"IODINE WATER.—In this number of our magazine we introduce to the attention of our readers this medical preparation. We have done so, not for pay, nor because we receive any benefit from it, but because we believe it has unfeignedly benefited others—for which we have uniformly declared our heartfelt gratitude to God, and because of obligation to Dr. Anders & Co., have made us insert the following:

"My only son, George F. Storrs, now 27 years old, has been afflicted, for some dozen years, more or less, with painful swellings and inflammations in various parts of his body, which, for months, left him nearly to death, then a respite for a season, but only for a return of the disease with more violence. For the past three years he has had an open sore on his breast; and latterly one near his collar bone, with ulceration in his throat, that threatened to close his windpipe. Such disease appeared incurable. In this position, he applied to Dr. Anders & Co. By the use of the Iodine Water the ulceration in his throat disappeared in a short time. Continuing its use, in less than two months he was apparently healed, and his general health much improved. This son, whom we had long loved, but had ceased to hope for, in consequence, is now, apparently, in a fair way to recover as perfect health as is common to our mortal state. In gratitude to God, who has thus answered prayer, and in justice to Dr. Anders & Co., I have made this statement, satisfied that there is virtue in the Iodine Water sufficient to cure most of this congeries with which my editor for bringing to their notice.

Second-Lieut. JAMES F. BARNES, Nineteenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, tried for conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline; found guilty, and sentenced to be dismissed the service of the United States.

First-Lieut. JOSEPH J. HUNT, Seventy-first Ohio Volunteers, tried for absence from his command without leave, during an order, under which he proceeded to Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 20, 1863, and remained there until about the 17th of August, 1863; found guilty of the charge and its specification, and sentenced to be reduced to the ranks, to date from Oct. 24, 1863, to serve three years or during the war in such regiment or corps as shall be designated by the Commanding General of the Department.

First-Lieut. JOHN B. RAUB, Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, tried for conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman, entering the Louisville Theatre twice drunk, and conducting and disturbing the whole play that evening; found guilty of the charge and its specifications, and sentenced to be dismissed the service.

Maj. HENRY BOEHER, Jr., Commissary of Subsistence, Missouri State Militia, tried for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, forgery and embezzlement of public property intrusted to him; found guilty of the charge and sentenced to be dishonorably dismissed from the service of the United States, and to forfeit all the pay and allowances now due him by the United States. The Court took into consideration the mitigating circumstances connected with the case, and particularly the fact of his restoring and returning to the United States a much larger sum than is shown by the evidence that he embezzled.

Capt. JOHN CARPENTER, Second cavalry, Arkansas Volunteers, tried for gross neglect of duty; violation of the 35th Article of War, willfully allowing Government property, in his charge, to be destroyed; and violation of the 60th Article of War, shamefully abandoning his post of guard which he was commanded to defend, and indecently and disgracefully the same; found guilty, and sentenced to forfeit all his pay and be dismissed from the service.

Capt. H. J. LATHAM, Assistant Quartermaster United States Volunteers, tried for misapplication and embezzlement of public funds; transferring and lending the public money of the United States, depositing in private banks public funds, converting to his own use and benefit large sums of public money, and purchasing eleven horses with the money so embezzled; also, for aiding and assisting to obtain the payment or allowance of false or fraudulent claims; squandering the public funds by paying higher prices for hay, wood and corn than was necessary; purchasing claims of one J. C. WILSON, largely increased by fraudulent additions, after having refused to buy the original claims when presented by other parties; purchasing orders or receipts for supplies of one J. C. WILSON at much higher prices than those named on the face of said orders or receipts, and paying higher prices for horses than was necessary, taking them at the highest rates at which they were offered; and also for neglect and violation of duty to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, allowing one J. C. WILSON, a contractor, to keep his books and accounts, and contracting for and receiving from J. C. WILSON hay at eighteen dollars per ton, when it could have been purchased at eight or nine dollars per ton; found guilty of these charges and their specifications, and sentenced to be cashiered.

A Delinquent Army Officer.

SECRETARY STANTON'S ORDER IN THE CASE OF COL. BELGER, QUARTERMASTER.

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 30, 1863.

In the case of Col. JAMES BELGER, Chief Quartermaster at Baltimore, who was tried before a Court-martial upon sundry charges and specifications for neglect of duty and fraudulent conduct in the hiring of transports and purchase of supplies, the Court found him, on each charge and specification, not guilty. But the Court place upon the record, by way of explanation of their finding, the following statement:

"The Court finds that Col. BELGER transacted a large amount of public business, within the time mentioned in the specifications, in the chartering of vessels and in the purchase of coal; and although in some instances he appears to have purchased coal at higher rates than the cash market prices, yet, considering the circumstances, especially the kind of funds provided by the Government for the payments he was required to make, the urgency of the orders under which he was frequently called upon to act, and the consequent necessity for immediate action, the Court attaches no criminality thereto, and has therefore made its findings in accordance with this judgment."

Upon a review of the evidence it appears:

1. That the "large amount of business" transacted in the chartering of vessels and in the purchase of coal," was for nearly a year confined exclusively to dealings with A. C. Hall and Collins. It does not appear that, during all this time, Col. BELGER deemed the amount of duty assigned to him so great as to compel him to ask to be relieved from any portion, or for another officer to assist him—one or the other of which it was incumbent upon him to require, if the duties were too arduous or extensive to admit of their proper performance by him alone.

2. The "some instances" in which "he appears" to have purchased coal at "higher rates than the cash market prices," are the transactions of a year, amounting to an aggregate of more than $100,000, in which some instances he is proved to have paid A. C. HALL or COLLINS, 40 and 50 per cent. more than HALL or COLLINS paid for the coal to coal-dealers of the same city, who delivered it on board of Government vessels by HALL or COLLINS' orders.

3. "The kind of money provided by the Government for the payments he was required to make" is not in proof. No testimony whatever was offered or official papers submitted which show that Col. BELGER was not provided with the same kind of funds paid by all other quartermasters—Treasury notes and certificates of indebtedness. Assuming that he had only certificates of indebtedness, and that certificates were at all times at the greatest discount mentioned by the witnesses at any time, and Col. BELGER's purchases will still be at rates unaccountably high.

4. As to "the urgency of the orders under which he was frequently called upon to act," it may be said generally that throughout the testimony there appears no emergency so pressing as to have precluded a strict conformity with the regulations of the service in making any purchase or contract in which he was called upon to enter for the Government. Every officer is bound to exercise diligence and at least ordinary care and prudence in his purchases, and it is hard to conceive how Col. BELGER, stationed in Baltimore, could be ignorant that he was paying higher than the cash market rates, or how he could procure articles urgently needed from his favored dealers more speedily than from the same persons who supplied them and hauled the coal from their yards to the vessels.

The record thus shows that the accused was guilty of chartering vessels, and purchasing coal "at higher rates than the cash market price." The excuse suggested by the Court-martial is unsupported by proof. The transports and supplies purchased by Col. BELGER must have been paid for in the Government funds, to wit, Treasury notes, or at the option of the creditor, in certificates of indebtedness. These funds have long been the standard of prices, and the only excuse suggested is indicative of the guilty nature of the transactions between the quartermaster and contractors. The Court-martial having found that the accused did charter vessels and purchase coal "at rates higher than the cash market prices," and there being no other excuse proven or suggested than those mentioned, the Court has, upon the record, practically negatived its finding on the charges and specifications.

The case might have been sent back to the Court for revision, but the nature of the excuses suggested by the Court-martial, and especially their declaration that "they attach no criminality" to the conduct of a Quartermaster under the circumstances in proof, indicate very clearly that, so far as concerned the action of the Court, the result would have remained the same. The evidence fully establishes the fact of dealings and transactions by the Quartermaster, by which the Government suffered loss by purchases and charters at "higher rates than the cash market prices." His conduct is, in the opinion of this Department, without necessity, justification, or excuse, and in such conduct the Department attaches a high degree of criminality. Few things can be more culpable than for a public officer systematically to pay to certain favored parties higher rates for supplies than might be and are in fact furnished at greatly lower rates in the same city, by other dealers. To employ the least of such conduct, it is a gross negligence that amounts to fraud.

The judgment by the Court of the facts found being in conflict with the formal finding on the charges makes the proceeding a nullity. The evidence fully establishes that Col. BELGER is guilty of gross neglect and violation of duty, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline. The proceedings of the Court are therefore disapproved, and Col. BELGER, Quartermaster, is, by order of the President, honorably dismissed from the United States service.

EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Record of a Colored Regiment.

THE FOURTH UNITED STATES COLORED TROOPS IN VIRGINIA.

The following letter gives definite testimony regarding the efficiency of at least one colored regiment now in the service:

CAMP AT YORKTOWN, Va., Friday, Nov. 20, 1863.

Hon. J. W. Edmonds:

MY DEAR SIR: Well knowing the active interest you have taken in the welfare of the colored troops, which now compose quite a part of our army, I trust a few lines from the Fourth United States colored troops may not be unacceptable.

The regiment left Baltimore a few days after I last saw you, and proceeded at once to this place, where, as near as we can learn, we are destined to remain some time.

We had hardly formed our camp when we were ordered, with five days' rations, on a reconnoissance into Mathews County, Virginia, to disperse a band of guerrillas who had been infesting that region. We started at 5 o'clock P. M., ignorant of our destination at 4 P. M., after having marched 15 miles. We felt quite elated that we had done a praiseworthy thing" for a new regiment, and on its first march, but when we were informed by some officers of the Tenth Pennsylvania cavalry, who accompanied us on the expedition, that during all our service, they never, before had but one regiment follow them as closely as we did, for that distance, I think we were justly proud of our day's work. During our three days' stay in the enemy's country, we had several opportunities of meeting their rattlesnake tactics of retreating as well as their coolness and determination to attempt our capture by guerrillas and bushwhackers. To say that we were perfectly satisfied, if by no means doing justice to our soldiers—for soldiers they certainly proved themselves to be, as they won the admiration and received the compliments of every officer who saw them—not even excepting Gen. WEITZEL, who commanded the expedition, and who is by no means partial to colored soldiers. Gen. FOSTER, in his report, compliments us highly, and adds, referring to our march, returning, that we "marched thirty miles in one day, with no stragglers," which was done in just twelve hours.

We have since been on another raid—this time up the Peninsula—to within 25 miles of Richmond. We met no battle of great importance, we were in too heavy force to be attacked by them, but only their scouts and pickets, with whom occasional shots were exchanged.

From the surprise and indignation of the inhabitants on this route, I inferred that colored soldiers, especially on our side of the house, were a new sight to them. It was, indeed, amusing to see the women watching us as we passed,—their indignation overflowing—but their threatening fists, with which they evidently expected to put our regiment to flight, only provoked their laughter and shouts, and the retreat was generally made by the attacking party. We were also informed by several others that, before we returned, we would see "chivalry" enough to annihilate all the "niggers" Old Abe could bring. But if I remember right, these F. F. V's were very careful to keep outside of rifle range, and, after we returned, made their usual boasts of what they would have done had we not returned just when we did. On this occasion, too, our men received the praise of all who noticed them, and are fast winning a reputation of which any soldier might be proud.

THE BATTLE OF CHATTANOOGA.

Official Record of the Progress of the Struggle.

We have already given consecutively the official bulletins from Gen. GRANT and THOMAS regarding the progress of the fighting at Chattanooga, as they were furnished to us at the time by the authorities at Washington. In the official Army and Navy Gazette for the present week we find these dispatches printed as they were received by the War Department. Some of them have not before been published, and, for prudential reasons, sentences were excluded from them which were, as a careful reading will show. As a succinct record of the great contest we, therefore, reprint them entire:

FROM GEN. GRANT.

[Received 8:40 P. M., Nov. 23, 1863.]

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., 3 P. M., Nov. 23, 1863.

Major-Gen. H. W. Halleck, Generalissimo-Chief:

Gen. THOMAS' troops attacked the enemy's left at 3 P. M., to-day, carried first line of rifle-pits, running over the knoll twelve hundred yards in front of Wood's Fort and low ridge to the right of it, taking about 200 prisoners, besides killed and wounded, our loss small. The troops moved under fire with all the precision of veterans on parade. THOMAS' troops will intrench themselves, and hold their position until daylight, when SHERMAN will join the attack from the mouth of the Chickamauga, and a decisive battle will be fought. U. S. GRANT,

Major-General.

FROM GEN. THOMAS.

[Received in cipher 2:45, A. M., Nov. 24.]

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 24, 1863—12 M.

Maj.-Gen. Halleck, General-in-Chief:

Yesterday at half-past 12 GRANGER'S and PALMER'S corps, supported by HOWARD'S, were advanced directly in front of our fortifications, drove in the enemy's pickets, and carried his first line of rifle-pits between Chattanooga and Citico creeks. We captured 8 commissioned officers and about 180 enlisted men. Our loss about 111.

To-day Hooker, with command of GRANT'S division, Twelfth corps, GORMAN'S division, Fifteenth corps, and two brigades Fourteenth corps, carried north slope of Lookout Mountain, with small loss on our side and a loss to the enemy of 500 or 600 prisoners, killed and wounded not reported.

There has been continuous fighting from 12 o'clock until after night, but our troops gallantly repulsed every attempt to retake the position. SHERMAN crossed the Tennessee before daylight this morning, at the mouth of South Chickamauga, with three divisions of the Fifteenth corps, one division Fourteenth corps, and carried the northern extremity of Missionary Ridge.

Gen. GRANT has ordered a general advance in the morning. Our success so far has been complete, and the behavior of the troops admirable.

GEO. H. THOMAS, Major-General.

FROM GEN. GRANT.

[Received 4 A. M., 25th.]

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 24, 1863—6 P. M.

Major-Gen. Halleck:

The fight to-day progressed favorably. SHERMAN carried the end of Missionary Ridge, and his right is now at the Tunnel and left at Chickamauga Creek. Troops from Lookout Valley carried the point of the mountain, and now hold the eastern slope and point back up. I cannot yet tell the amount of casualties, but our loss is not heavy. HOOKER reports 2,000 prisoners taken, besides which a small number have fallen into our hands from Missionary Ridge.

U. S. GRANT, Major-General.

FROM GEN. GRANT.

[Received 10 P. M.]

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 25, 1863—7½ P. M.

Maj.-Gen. H. W. Halleck, General-in-Chief:

Although the battle lasted from early dawn till dark this evening, I believe I am not premature in announcing a complete victory over BRAGG. Lookout Mountain top, all the rifle-pits in Chattanooga Valley, and Missionary Ridge entire, have been carried and now held by us.

I have no idea of finding BRAGG here to-morrow.

U. S. GRANT, Maj.-Gen. Com'g.

FROM GEN. THOMAS.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 25, 1863—12 Midnight.

To Maj.-Gen. H. W. Halleck, General-in-Chief:

The operations of to-day have been more successful than yesterday, having carried Missionary Ridge from near Rossville to the railroad tunnel, with a comparatively small loss on our side, capturing about forty pieces of artillery, a large quantity of small arms, camp and garrison equipage, besides the arms in the hands of the prisoners. We captured two thousand prisoners, of whom two hundred were officers of all grades, from Colonels down.

We will pursue the enemy in the morning. The conduct of the officers and troops was everything that could be expected. Missionary Ridge was carried simultaneously at six different points.

GEO. H. THOMAS, Maj.-Gen.

FROM GEN. THOMAS.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 26, 1863—11 P. M.

Maj.-Gen. Halleck, General-in-Chief:

Gen. DAVIS, commanding division, Fourteenth corps, operating with Gen. SHERMAN, gained possession of Chickamauga depot at 12:30 to-day. My troops having pursued by the Rossville and Greysville road, came upon the enemy's cavalry at Mill-Bridge, posted on east side of creek. They retired on the approach of our troops. The bridge will be finished for a few hours to rebuild the bridge. Mr. HOOKER thinks he can reach Greysville, and perhaps Ringgold, to-night. Many stragglers have been picked up to-day, perhaps 2,000. Among the prisoners are many who were paroled at Vicksburgh.

GEORGE H. THOMAS, Major-General.

FROM GEN. GRANT.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., 1 A. M., Nov. 27, 1863.

Major-Gen. Halleck, General-in-Chief:

I am just in from the front. The rout of the enemy is most complete. Abandoned wagons, caissons, and occasionally pieces of artillery, are everywhere to be found. I think BRAGG's loss will fully reach sixty pieces of artillery. A large number of prisoners have fallen into our hands. The pursuit will continue to Red Clay in the morning, for which place I shall start in a few hours.

U. S. GRANT, Major-General.

FROM GEN. THOMAS.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 27, 1863—12 P. M.

Maj.-Gen. H. W. Halleck, General-in-Chief:

Gen. PALMER reports JEFFERSON'S division, Fourteenth corps, surprised A. P. STEWART'S division last night, taking four guns, two caissons, and many prisoners. HOOKER reports his arrival at Ringgold at 9 A. M. today, found the road strewn with caissons, limbers and ambulances. He commenced skirmishing with enemy at 11 A. M., in Railroad Pass or Gap, near Ringgold—about half GEORMAN'S and third GRANT'S division engaged, and forced the enemy to abandon the position he had taken in the pass. Both divisions suffered severely, the enemy making desperate resistance. On the morning of the 26th, past Col. LAGG, commanding Second brigade, Second cavalry division, across South Chickamauga to make raids on East Tennessee and Georgia Railroad. He returned this evening, bringing 250 prisoners, and reports he has destroyed the railroad from Dyner's station to the Hiawassee, and ten miles southwest of Cleveland. He also destroyed 60 wagons and large quantity commissary stores and other supplies at Cleveland. The prisoners he have taken since the 23d now footed up more than 3,000.

Battle of Pine Bluff.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF COL. CLAYTON.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF ARKANSAS, LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 3, 1863.

MAJOR: I have the honor to inclose Col. CLAYTON's report of his gallant defense of Pine Bluff, also Brig.-Gen. CARLESLE's report of his pursuit of Maj. [illegible]

[illegible] CARLESLE captured more property than fell into the possession of Marmaduke during his raid.

Very respectfully, &c., your obedient servant,

FREDK. STEELE, Maj.-Gen. Comd'g.

Maj. C. G. Gram, A. A. G., Dep't of the Missouri.

HEADQUARTERS POST OF PINE BLUFF, Pine Bluff, Oct. 27, 1863.

GENERAL: I respectfully submit to you the following report of the battle fought at this place Oct. 25, between Gen. MARMADUKE's forces and the garrison of this post.

About 6 o'clock in the morning I sent Lieut. CLARK, Fifth Kansas cavalry, with one company, out in the direction of Princeton. He did not go far before he met the enemy advancing in force. The enemy's skirmishers fired on him at once, but soon after an armed party, bearing a flag of truce, came forward, and the officer in command of this party insisted that he should be allowed to pass in immediately. Lieut. CLARK told him it was not way to first fire on him, and then insist on going in with a flag of truce. But he would give him half an hour for him (CLARK) to send in to headquarters and get an answer. He rejected the proposition, and said he had dispatches from Gen. MARMADUKE to the commanding officer, he supposed demanding a surrender of the place. The Lieutenant replied: "Col. CLAYTON never surrenders, but is always anxious for you to come and take him, and you must get back to your command immediately, or I will order my men to fire on you." He fell back, and they commenced skirmishing again. Meantime the whole command was ordered out, and skirmishers sent in every direction; also 300 negroes set to work rolling cotton bales out of the warehouses. In less than half an hour I had all the streets leading into Court-square completely and very formidably fortified with cotton bales, and my artillery—six mountain howitzers and three small steel rifled guns—planted so as to command every street leading into the square; my sharpshooters posted in all of the houses and other buildings on the square, so that the enemy could in no way approach the works only through the open spaces. I then had about 200 negroes commence carrying water from the river up to the square and fill all the barrels they could find; so that, if necessary, I could hold out two days even though cut off from the river. The enemy succeeded in driving in my skirmishers about 8 o'clock, and approached the works in three columns, as follows: on my right, centre and left, the main one being in the centre and opened on me with their artillery, 12 pieces, a part of which were 12-pound rifle guns, throwing both the Hotchkiss and the James projectiles. The firing from both sides, from the artillery and the sharpshooters, continued with great rapidity until 2 o'clock. Between 12 o'clock M. and 1 o'clock P. M., the enemy set fire to the buildings on my right, expecting thereby to rout me; but I put some 200 negroes to carrying water and throwing it on the buildings immediately joining the square, and thus prevented the fire from doing me any damage. The enemy seeing that he failed in his efforts to drive me by fire as well as by force, planted another battery on my centre and kept up a heavy cannonading for a short time, then retreated (about 3 o'clock, P. M.,) leaving a large portion of his wounded and dead on the field. I followed him for about one mile, then returned and stationed my pickets as usual.

My loss was 11 killed, 27 wounded, and 1 missing. There were also 5 negroes killed and 12 wounded. The enemy's loss in killed and wounded, so far as ascertained, is about 130, and will probably reach 150. I have also 3 Lieutenants and 30 men prisoners, 15 of whom are wounded. The buildings that were burned by the enemy were occupied by the Fifth Kansas cavalry as quarters, consequently their camp and garrison equipage, and their books and papers, were all burned. The train was also corralled in sheds in rear of the buildings that were burned. When the fire was raging the mules were certainly in a sad plight from burning, and 62 of them are missing. The enemy also burned one warehouse, containing over 200 bales of cotton. In setting fire to these buildings Gen. MARMADUKE committed the gross and barbarous deed of burning some of his own wounded. Several of his own men who were wounded were burned to death, and almost entirely consumed by the flames that he kindled. The Court-house, Gen. JAMES', Gen. TELL'S and Jesse BIGGS's houses were all nearly destroyed by the enemy's artillery. There is scarcely a house in town that does not show the effects of the battle. The enemy plundered every house he could get to, and stole every horse and mule from the citizens that he could lay his hands on. The prisoners that I captured reported Gen. MARMADUKE's force from 2,000 to 3,000 men and 12 pieces of artillery. I think he had some 2,500 men and 12 pieces of artillery.

My force consisted of the Fifth Kansas cavalry, commanded by Maj. THOMAS W. SCUDDER, and the 43rd Indiana cavalry, commanded by Lieut.-Col. THOMAS N. PAGE, and one company of State militia, commanded by Capt. MURRY, amounting in all to some 500 men. Capt. MURRY's company behaved like veterans. The officers and men both of the Fifth Kansas cavalry and of the First Indiana cavalry behaved most admirably. The fact that so small a force kept four times their number at bay for five hours, and finally drove them from the field, reasonably shows the command greater efficiency and gallantry than words can do; every officer and soldier in the whole command seemed determined to fight as long as there was a round of ammunition left. The negroes also did me excellent service, and deserve much praise therefor.

I am, General, very respectfully your obedient servant, POWELL CLAYTON, Col. Comd'g.

Maj.-Gen. STEELE, Comd'g Army of Arkansas.

From the Rio Grande.

REVOLT OF MEXICANS IN THE REBEL SERVICE.

We have received a copy of the Brownsville Flag, of the 30th ult., from which we take the following account of the mutiny of some of the Mexicans in the Confederate service at the mouth of the Rio Grande:

"The garrison of Fort Brown and the citizens of Brownsville were thrown into an alarm on Tuesday night by the report that Capt. A. VIDAL's company, heretofore stationed at the mouth of the Rio Grande, had revolted, and were marching upon the city of Brownsville to capture the place. The military force hitherto left to defend this post, had been withdrawn during the day, and was then encamped some distance from the town, on the road to the interior. Col. DUFF and his staff were still in town, however, but were to leave next morning. The reluctance that Gen. HEBERT had to offer to the revolt consisted of a portion of Capt. TAYLOR's company and the whole of Capt. CUMMINS's company.

On Tuesday, after Col. DUFF's regiment had left, two men from Company A, JESSE LITTERAL and D. H. DASHIEL, were sent on an express to VIDAL at the mouth of the river, with orders that he at once report to Col. TAYLOR, commanding Fort Brown. The expressmen met VIDAL about twenty miles from town, already on the march, as he stated that he had already been informed that he would be ordered to Brownsville. The expressmen delivered the order to VIDAL, and at once joined his command on the march. Arriving within ten miles of town, VIDAL requested DASHIEL to drink with him, and while the latter was drinking VIDAL and the Mexicans commenced shooting at the expressmen. DASHIEL was instantly killed, but LITTERAL succeeded in mounting his horse and making his escape, bringing with him a horrid wound through the jaws.

LITTERAL rode for life, and soon reached Brownsville, where he gave the information that the Mexican company was coming. The military at once made defensive preparations by calling all citizens inside of the garrison—by issuing arms to such as had none, and by placing the heavy cannon, consisting of one 24-pounder, and one 6-inch siege howitzer, in such position as to command the arsenal and the main approach to the garrison.

On Tuesday VIDAL left his camp at the mouth, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, taking with him all of his command, forty men, taking the road to Brownsville. He had previously caused the arrest of Messrs. SELKIRK, CLARK and KING, at the mouth, and had them brought to his camp. He discharged CLARK and SELKIRK, as he said, on account of their families, and because they were not worth killing; but he ordered a detail of six men to take Capt. KING and shoot him, which was done. (Capt. KING leaves a family of nine children to mourn his loss.) VIDAL took KING's pistol, horse and saddle. The outlaw then proceeded on his way to Brownsville, meeting and shooting the two expressmen, as described, and made a short stop at the ranch of Mr. YZQUIERDO, where he hoped to meet a Mexican named SOLIS, with whom he had a difficulty, and who only saved his life by swimming the river into Mexico. VIDAL here told his men that a war of races had begun, and the watchword was, 'Death to all Americans!'

VIDAL continued his march to within four miles of town, at the Resaca, where his men were discovered at 11 P. M. by a scout, under Lieut. VINSON, who had been sent out by Col. DUFF to reconnoitre for the enemy—for even at this time the outbreak was a matter of doubt amongst the military and the citizens. It was apprehended that the wounded soldier, who had saved the town at his own sacrifice, might have some sort in a drinking house.

The outlaws circled around the town, and after several halts in the vicinity, (at one time at the graveyard, where VIDAL received information from the town,) they moved up to GRAYSER's ranche, where they camped about 8 o'clock in the morning, and where they remained until 8 o'clock Wednesday morning. VIDAL, in his trip, robbed all the houses at the mouth of their previous, robbed Mr. COLE of several horses, and when he struck the road, levied contributions of money and cotton on all the teamsters he passed. His subsequent conduct is unknown, although we have a report that his men caused him, and drove him out of camp on Wednesday, saying that he had let them into an enterprise without consideration, plan or profit.

The course of the outlaws was marked by blood, and dead men were the guide posts that told how lately they had gone along. First, Capt. KING was shot. Next, two men are said to have been shot upon after leaving the death-scene of KING, and it is feared that one of those two men was Mr. S. G. FARIS, of this city, who was at the mouth of the river on business, and who has not since been heard of. Next, the two soldiers were shot in the most brutal and cowardly manner, without the shadow of a reason, unless it was a horrid appetite for blood. The next we hear of is Antonio CHUN, a very popular Mexican, living at Santa Rita, who has always been friendly to the whites. Next was JAVRSSON BARRENDOW, living at Santa Rita, without cause or provocation. These two latter were home. Reports reach us that others have been killed, but we prefer to leave such rumors unreported, as the fastness fearful enough without horrifying the public with more deaths than have occurred.

We understand that seven dead bodies have been found in the river near the mouth. One of the bodies was recognized by Mr. [illegible] to have had $800 with him.

All last accounts confirm the assumed extent of the revolt, it is reported that VIDAL has crossed from the country."

The French Navy—Its Present Strength—Recent Additions.

The state of the French Navy is mentioned in bulletin in the report upon the Condition of the Empire, some extracts from which we lately published.

The stations which France maintains at the different points of the globe, for the protection of her commerce and political influence, and the naval forces which she has had to keep up, to entirely unforeseen services, have remained in nearly the same state as last year.

The present year has seen a continuation of the building of the new fleet, in proportion to the credits allotted to the Marine department, and according to the basis adopted in 1857. At the present time the total number of the vessels of our fleet amounts to 745, including 26 floating gunboats. If we confine ourselves to reckoning the five types of ships called ships of war in the report of 1862, the number is only 110, thus subdivided:

	New Ships.	Mixed.	Total.
Ships of the line	13	37	50
Cuirassed frigates	6	—	6
Ordinary frigates	18	6	24
Corvettes	10	—	10
Avisos	43	—	43
Grand totals	90	43	133

Thus the new fleet had been increased by eight vessels completely finished, namely, two cuirassed frigates of 1,000 horse-power, three armed corvettes of 400, and two avisos of 150. But, on the other hand, seven ships of the old fleet have been condemned on account of age, and six vessels have been lost at sea, of which one was an aviso of 220 horse-power, and another a frigate.

Besides these finished works, a cuirassed frigate of 1,000 horse-power, called La Provence, has just been launched at Toulon. The other vessels of this type, actually on the stocks, have been carried on during the year to a state more or less advanced.

Four floating batteries destined for the defence of our coasts have been completely finished, and have terminated their trials.

Nautical experiments of the highest interest are going on at this moment to study the qualities of cuirassed vessels, by comparing them with other ships. Up to this time, all the results of these experiments are favorable, and show that they lose nothing at sea of that superiority which their costing of armor insures to them in combat.

The labors of the artillery for the construction of a material stock that has already realized great progress are continued, and also the studies of new pieces of ordnance of great power. The hydraulic works and the constructions necessary to provide our military ports with the means of action indispensable to the service of our new fleet are pushed on with all the activity compatible with the credits allotted; but it must be admitted that they are as yet far from meeting the exigencies produced everywhere by so complete a transformation of the naval material of all marines.

The Alabama.

SOME STATEMENTS ABOUT HER DEPARTURE FROM ENGLAND.

The report of the reception of the Alabama at Cape Town, as published in the Advertiser of that place, has been issued in pamphlet form for circulation in England, together with the narrative of the cruisings of the vessel, by an officer. The writer prefaces his journal with a brief account of the origin of the Alabama, and says:

"After the outbreak of the war, the immense naval superiority of the North gave them considerable advantages over the South, who, lacking convenience and material, were not able to build vessels with sufficient dispatch, and the Confederate States Government sent over Capt. J. D. BULLOCH to England for the purpose of purchasing a war steamer. Accordingly, the 'No. 290' was built and intended for a Confederate vessel of war."

After next describing, with evident gusto, the build and rig of the vessel, he plunges in medias res, as follows:

"At 9:15 A. M., of the 28th July, 1862, we weighed anchor, and proceeded slowly down the Mersey, anchoring in Moelna Bay—having on board relatives and friends of the builders, both ladies and gentlemen. Our ostensible object in coming was to go 'on a trial trip,' and the presence of the ladies and gentlemen gave a certain color to the report. In the evening we transferred our visitors to a steam-tug. We remained here, shipping hands, &c., until 2 A. M. of the 31st, when we got under weigh, ostensibly bound to Nassau, Bahamas. A strong breeze was blowing from the southwest, accompanied with heavy rain, a heavy sea was running at the time, forming altogether a most uninviting picture, and we not at all anticipating a short good luck. Our unceremonious departure was owing to the fact of news being received to the effect that the Customs authorities had orders to board and detain us that morning."

The question which needs to be answered just here is how the officers of the Alabama came to be informed of facts which, from the nature of the case, were known only to the customs officers.

HOW TO COMMUNICATE WITH UNION PRISONERS IN RICHMOND.—Letters should be written on a half sheet of note or letter paper, and only on one side. They should relate solely to matters purely domestic. Inclose the letter in an unsealed envelope, and put in five cents for postage. On the left hand corner mark, "Via Flag of Truce, care of Brig.-Gen. S. A. MEREDITH, United States Commissioner of Exchange, Fortress Monroe, Va." Then inclose it in a sealed envelope, addressed to "Brig.-Gen. S. A. MEREDITH, Fortress Monroe."

Money should be sent in the same manner as letters. It will be taken in charge by the rebel authorities at the prisons, and given little by little to the person for whom it is intended.

Persons sending boxes will do well to observe carefully the following directions. Mark the Rosehill Ladies' Soldiers' Relief Association.

THANKSGIVING DAY, NEW-YORK, Nov. 26, 1863.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

You will expect some account of the festivities that took place at the Central Park Hospital on our glorious Thanksgiving Day. At the Hospital there are about 400 soldiers convalescing from fevers and wounds, who were bountifully entertained by the Rose Hill Ladies' Soldiers' Relief Association, of which Mrs. HUNTING, Mrs. ELLISON, Mrs. KELLY, Mrs. CLARKSON, Mrs. SEYMOUR, Mrs. LOUGEE and other ladies are the Managers. The Thanksgiving dinner over, the dessert was garnished with music by the Quartette Club attached to the Association, the whole audience joining in the "Star-Spangled Banner" and other National airs. American flags tastefully decorated the walls and windows of the spacious dining hall, and a large rebel flag hung in "Hutchinson," as if pulling before the Stars and Stripes.

Dr. S. M. GOURLEY, United States Army, the Surgeon in charge, deserves the greatest praise for the condition of his hospital, and the Rose Hill ladies bear testimony to the kindness and efficiency of sister Ulstonia and her eight associates, who are permanently attached to the hospital as volunteer and gratuitous nurses.

The exercises here were concluded by a short address by Col. ELIJAH F. SMIGNER, who alluded to the one-legged man present, saying that having buried a leg on the battle-field, they had planted a foot in front of the enemy which would never retreat, and he believed the parts of the bodies there present were equals in heroic virtue to those absentees. He said that the ladies of the Rose Hill Association were the ladies who, if they had been men, would have been soldiers; and, if he might paraphrase a text of Scripture, he should say that to-day "Veterans and heroines are met together, charity and patriotism have kissed each other."

He said Washington in 1789 issued a proclamation for a day of thanksgiving, in which, among others, he stated one ground for thankfulness to be the suppression of the recent rebellion; and he concluded by expressing the hope that ABRAHAM LINCOLN might have occasion, before the expiration of his present term of office, to issue another Thanksgiving proclamation, in which he too could assign as one of the grounds for thankfulness, the "suppression of this rebellion."

Loud and long cheers followed the close of the speech, which was frequently interrupted by applause, and the soldiers responded with a special three times three for the Ladies' Rose Hill Soldiers' Relief Association.
